medilished Aug. 4, 1891. HENRY PETERSON & CO., Publishers, PHILADELPHIA, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1867. Price 80.50 A Year, in Advance. Whole Number Isomed, 9466.

TO ONE WHO UNDERSTANDS.

WRITTEN FOR THE SATURDAY RYBNING POST, BY H. B.

My little girl, last night I read The words you wrote me, ere you slept.
They touched me; into my ead heart
A cofter, gentler feeling crept.
So I have said—"I have no hope And no ambition—save for fame." For this you pity me, and deem Life lost, which has no nobler aim.

Well, child-and if it is, what then? The bitter joy, the toilsome gain
Is something to fill up one's heart,
To drown its cries, to appeare its pain. Through all of our appointed days
The weary way we still must tread. We may not die; we cannot starva, One must eat busks, not having broad.

What do women live for !- Love. To have, enfolded round our life, A never-failing tenderners. To hear a dear voice call us "Wife." The tender pain of motherhood

To feel, the while soft fingers twine About us, baby lips meet ours.
This is our life. Ours—but not mine

God pity me! There does not live A gentler soul than I would be, If only some heart throbbed with mine, If only lave were given to me. That being denied, I still may find Poor compensation, scant delight, In search for fame. Death frees us all. 'Tis growing late. Dear child, good-night

CARLYON'S YEAR.

By the author of "Lost Sir Massingberd," &c

CHAPTER XI.

A LITTLE DINNER AT GREYCRAGS,

The institution of dinner parties, admirable for mankind in many respects, and certainly su-perior to all other forms of entertainment, is not perior to all other forms or entertainment, is not so advantageous with regard to our relations with the other sex. Man can have no better op-portunity of cultivating acquaintance with his brother man, but scarcely a worse for improving his position with the lady of his affections. We hay not be so factidious as the noble bard who bated to see a woman cat," but we still must acknowledge that we had rather see our beloved We do not ng almost anything else know how it may be with chopeticks, but a knife and fork in woman's hands seem certainly in-imical to the tender passion; the jingle of glasses, the cistter of plates, are not to be trusted to, as in any degree permanent; ser-vants are not invariably noisy; and just as, under cover of a fusillade of this sort, you have hazarded a remark with meaning, a sudden silence may place you in the most embarrassing sel upon her fork, presents a truly ridiculous spectacle, and you—with the sentence you dare not finish—how foolish you also look, as you plunge madly at your champagne glass, and it were an opaque pitcher in which you could hide your diminished head. And yet, how you counted beforehand on that evening when you knew you were to meet her, and that your good-natured hostess would see that your Arabella should be placed under your charge in the procession to the dining-room! For my part, I think the Eastern custom, which excludes fe-males from feasts, is a most excellent one. The ouly exception should be pionics, which, indeed, would never exist except for women, not what they eat, or what they drink, but only wherewithal they shall be clothed.

However, as I have said, the lover still looks forward to the repast at which he is to meet his fair one, notwithstanding the not unrecorded experiences of the generations before him: and the Thursday on which John Carlyon was invited to Greycrage, seemed to beckon him to

His late interview with Agnes had filled his heart with hope—it must be confessed on but slight grounds. He did not take into account the depth of gratitude which she felt for the service he had rendered her, and which, of ing than that of a stranger making his first visit of ceremony; the unconventional simplicity of her nature, too, so different from that of young ladies in general, gave to her manners a frank ness and cordiality which he had construed, somewhat egotistically perhaps, into a liking for hereeif. But, he was at all events certain that she did not shrink from him as he had appre hended would have been the case, in pious hor ror. He did not at all dislike her remarks to him upon the question of religion. They evinced an interest in his future welfare, which perhaps might be extended to the present. Casrity be farriages themselves were said to be made it Heaven. It was very foolish of him to leap to these conclusions; but the fact was, Carlyon was dealing with a person whose motives of ac. ling.

tion he could appreciate, and yet by no means understand. Nothing is more unintelligible to an irreligious man than the position of the truly pious. The quoters of texts, the wearers of long faces, the denouncers of fiction, and all that rout of the vulgar and ignorant who make up so large a portion of what is called "the religious world," are very transparent to him, and afford him endless opportunities of seefling at the Great Cause of which these foolish persons language themselves to be the advocates. But, Great Cause of which these foolish persons lengine themselves to be the advocates. But, brought face to face with those who spend their lives in doing good, from motives quite other than those of simple benevolence, and whose charity is of the heart as well as the hand, he is puzzled how to treat them. These "amiable enthusiasta," who show their faith by their works, are very embarrassing to him; but they are seldon met with in society.

works, are very emparrasing to man, but any are seldom met with in society.

Ourlyon had long regarded Agnes like some star set far above him in a heaven of its own; but now that he had been admitted to her presence, and listened to her opinions, she seemed no longer out of his reach. Yet as soon might he imagine that the substance of the star wa any nearer to him, because in some tranquil pool he had seen its reflex, and hung over it for a little unrebuked.

It is sad to think how soon with ordinary men, and especially with those who pay a some-what exceptional homage to women, the angel is lost in the wife, and the wife in the drudge; how lightly they value the priva once so humbly sought when they have become possessed of it. With one of Carlyon's generous and knightly nature such degradation was impossible, but he was not without some share of that vanity of hi sex which translates the pressure of a woman's hand into "Porcevere," and her smile into "You will succeed." A week ago, had his beart ven-tured to whisper to him that Agnes Crawford might some day be his, he would have laughed atoud for very bitterness. But now, as he was borne towards Greyersgs, in the close car of the country, to dine in company with that no longer unapproachable young woman, the idea of such an union was by no means laughable, but eminearly practicable and very nic. There was no dinner-party to meet him, of course. Not that there is any difficulty in the country in getting folks to dine with you, for they will cheerfully come six, and even ten miles, to do it in the depth of winter, but simply because Mr. Craw-ford knew nobody to sak. Mr. Puce, indeed, would have given five pounds (and he was not a recklessly extravagant man either) for an invitation to Greycrage; but Mr. Puce was not vitation to Greycrage; but ar. the there. Mr. Carstairs was the only guest, bettere. Mr. Carstairs was the only guest, bethere. sides Carlyon, who was not an inmate of the house.

An apology for this circumstance was tendered by the stately old man, as he welcomed the young equire, who on his part rejoined, most truthfully, that he was glad they were to be so small a company. He might, with equal varesmall a company. He might, with equal vare-city, have added that at least one of the present city, have accordinate reactions of the present party could have been well spared. Mr. Richard Crawford, offensively good-looking and objec-tionably young, was standing by his countr's side, and continued there to stand while Cartyon and she shook hands and dilated upon the fineness of the evening-as though June were generally It was quite a relief when cheery Mr storms. Caretairs bustled in late—("when a lady's in the case, my dear air, and especially under certain circumstances-ahem-all other things mue give place")-and fastened bimself upon Me Richard, with some startling particulars concarning the right of fishing, which that young gentleman, it reems, had exercised of late in contempt of the lawful authority of Charles, Earl Disney. The doctor, indeed, was just one of those persons whose presence is invaluable in a small company, in which there are discord ant elements. A common acquaintance of all, be seemed to be unaware of the existence of any antipathics. He rauled on at dinner from one subject of goesip to another in his good natured war, insisting especially upon the attention of Richard as being a vouth, and one who had never paid him his dues in any other form. In value the young man replied to him in monosyllables, and never took his eyes of in reality innocently enough about ordinary matters; the doctor poured forth his cornu copia of news to the last item, and then took to

"By the bye, Mr. Richard, ever since I heard you have been to Peru, I have wanted to have a long talk with you about the chinchons

And a long talk he had, lasting through half the repast, during which his unfortunate victim presented the appearance rather of one who was employed in taking quinine than of merely conversing about it. Mr. Crawford, senior, threw in a word or two, here and there, evincing con elderable knowledge of the subject, but never at sufficient length to extricate his nepher from the discussion and set him at liberty to watch his cousin and her neighbor. If, in short, the whole thing had been planned for the discom-flure of the young sailor, and for affording his opportunity to Carlyon, the end in view could not have been more successfully attained. When Agnes had risen and departed, the doctor, exhibitated by social success and some first-rate Madeira, was still the lion of the even

"I am glad to see you to-night, Mr. Carlyon," said the little man, good-humoredly; "the last time we parted, it was after rather an unpleasant discussion; but forgive and forget unpressant discussion; but forgive and forget is my motto, as I am sure it is yours. And I am glad to see you Aere, sir, especially, where you will find precept and example too—for, if your excellent daughter, Mr. Crawford, does not convert him from his errors, neither would one who rose from the dead; that's my opinion."

"I, too, am extremely glad." observed the who rose from the dead; that's my opinion."

"I, too, am extremely glad," observed the old gentleman, with a grave smile, "to see Mr. Carlyon here, although I was not aware that he stood in need of spiritual aid. But for him, sir, my daughter, of whom you are pleased to speak so highly, would not be now alive; nor, indeed, would this young gentleman."

"I have already endeavored to express my gratitude to Mr. Carlyon," rejoined Richard, stiffy. "Mr. Carsealts, I think I know what you have in your mind, and also in your pocket. I assure you my uncle has no sort of objection to your smoking a cigar."

"None whatever," responded the old gentleman, and the cigars were lighted accordingly. Carlyon had not thought it possible that any observation of Richard Crawford's could have afforded him so much satisfaction. Armed with afforded him so much satisfaction. Armed with the benignant weed he knew that he would be permitted to dream as he pleased while the doctor talked; that he could concest his thoughts in grateful ellence as easily as he could hide countenance in the fragrant smoke.

"You are very indulgent, Mr. Crawford," began the little man; "unusually so to us young folks—ahem" (the doctor was on the shady side of fifty); "and you don't smoke yourself, neither, which makes the permission doubly commandable."

was so smoke dried in my-at one time in my life," observed the old gentleman, coldly, "that nothing annoys me in that way."

Mr. Carstairs had it upon the tip of his tongue to say, "That was in the srmy, I suppose?" but he did not feel quite equal to such an audacity, so helped himself to Madeira instead.

"One thing gives me great comfort," con-tinued the little man; "without which, even with your permission, I should scarcely venture to enjoy myself in this way, and that is, that Miss Agnes has no objection to the smell of smoke. She never asks a poor man to put out his pipe when visiting his cottage, although the tobacco in Mellor is by no means like that of the young squire's here. What a difference there is in tobacco! When we go home to-gether, Carlyon, I shall ask you for one out of Carlyon laughed, and they all laughed. This little doctor, who had dined and wined so freely, and was enjoying himself so much, was quite a godeend to the sompany. In the drawing room after dinner he was still the leading spirit. At the conclusion (and sometimes a little before it) of Agnee's charming Scotch songs he led the applause, clapping his large hands together, like a dramatic critic of the pit. Once again be informed Carlyen that he was glad to see him in that house, and in such improving com-pany. "Go and talk to her, sir, she will do you pany. "Go and talk to her, sir, she will do you good," whispered he, with estnestness. Nor did ing vampire-like on the unhappy Richard, he sucked his brains for a quarter of an hour, with reference to the insufficient supply of lime julce n the merchant service for the prevention In short, Carstairs was the guest of the vening ; nay, it was Carataire's dinne Crawford: it was almost Caretairs's daughter by previous marriage.

Cariyon laughed aloud as he and the little man strode home together that beautiful night having sent away their respective vehicles— Woodless brand in their mouths. He had not had much private talk with Agnes, but he waindebted to the surgeon for all that he had had Her last words had been the aweetest. She had expressed a wish to take the portrait of her equine preserver Red Berild. He was to ride the gallant roan to Greyerage for that purpose the very next day. She had said, "any day," and he had replied, "To-morroa" and to-morrow it was to be. It would take a long time and many sittings, (if such a term could be used for such a subject) to paint a horse. He saw no end to his opportunities of visiting Grey

What a charming evening we have had,' xclaimed he, enthusiastically.

' Very jolly !" answered the surgeon, prempt ly. "I never enjoyed myself more in my life Carious young fellow, though, that Mr. Richard deuced hard to get anything out of him. Wants a deal of prompting. But when I want to ge the truth out of a man, I fletter myself I gene rally get it. Hew do you like Miss Agnes? "Stop a bit; my olgar's going out. Give me a light, Carstaire."

"No, it len't. It is in a state of complete combostion. How do you like her, sir?" combostion. How do you ... "What, Miss Craw ord?"

"Well, I don't mean the girl that helped to wait at table; I refer to our late hostess. "I think she is a very-pleasant-agreeable

This opinion, given with the utmost delibera tion, and much of the conrelous solemnity of judge, seemed to satisfy the inquirer. The walked on for some distance in allence.

"Don't you think that young fellow, Richard,

"Very," returned the squire, unheeltatingly.
"And so young, too," continued the dector.
One cannot wonder that Miss Agues is obviously weak in that quarter. Did you not notice how quickly she spoke in his behalf when the old gentleman was inclined to take him to task

"Yes; she defends everybody: and, be sides, as you say, she is doubtless much attached to the lad. They are first cousins, you

They walked on in silence as before, except They walked on in silence as before, except that ever and anon the doctor now stole a look at his unconsclous companion, full of embarrasement and pity. His high spirits seemed to have quite descrited him. Carlyon, on the other hand, stepped gayly along, solacing himself, in place of another cigar, with snatohes of song, according to his custom when well content. song, according to his custom when well con-tent. They were drawing near to Mellor, where were to part, before Mr. Carstairs spoke again

"I say, Carlyon, did you observe a very singular thing that took place this evening while we were sitting and smoking in the dining-

"Yes," answered the other, demurely; "I noticed you let Mr. Richard finish one whole sentence without interrupting him; it was a phe-nomenon no one could fail to observe."

"Poob! pooh! I don't mean that; those young fellows want to be pulled up now and then. But did you see what old Crawford was doing while we smoked?"

doing while we smoked?"

"No; what?"

"Why, he was chewing tobacco. He kept moving the quid about in his mouth whenever he thought he was not observed."

"Nonsense. He was talking, only you would not listen to a word he had to say, so that he might have seemed to you to be only chewing." chewing.

"I will stake my existence, Carlyon, that he had a quid in his mouth. Was it not monstrous?"

"I didn't see it; and, therefore, can't say

"I didn't see it; and, therefore, can't say whether it was monstrous or not," rejoined the other, laughing.
"Now, do be serious, Carlyon. I mean, was it not monstrous for a person in Mr. Crawford's assumed position to be doing such a thing?"
"Acsumed; why assumed?" inquired the other, sharply.

"Assumed; why assumed?" inquired the other, sharply.
"Well, that's just the point," pursued the doctor. "Nobody knows who he is, or where he halls from. You have observed, I dare say, how shyly he fights cff any question about his past history. Well, coupling that peculiar fact with the eccupation in which I saw him engaged to pight, writing one and one together. gaged to-night—putting one and one together, you know—I should be surprised (notwithstand-ing Puce's opinion to the contrary), if this etrange old gentleman has not sprung from a very low origin."

very low origin."
"Weil; and what then?" inquired Carlyon,

"Well, a good deal then, I should think. I mean that this Crawford's relatives and antece donts are probably by no means what they ought grammar," returned the other, laughing. "If, however," added he, more gravely; "you refer to the possibly inferior social position of the ancestors of the gentleman with whom we have just condescended to dine, I honestly tell you I have no sympathy with such prejudices. A man's father may have been a sweep for all I care, so long as the color is not transmitted (I do stop at color.) And, by the bye, did you happen to observe that ducky female who flitted like a bat up the staircase as we were lighting our olgans

Yes; that was Cabra, young Mr. Richard's foster-mother. The only servant whom the She never alls in health, or she might afford me an opportunity for a harmless experiment I have long had in view, in respect to the circulation of the blood. Very interesting subject that

"Doubtless, doctor. That reminds me-since you are the medical attendant of Mr. Crawford might I ask, supposing it is no breach of pro-fersional confidence, whether he has anything the matter with his heart?"

The doctor's sublound face grew almost white he stopped suddenly. What in heaven's name, made you ask that question?" inquired be.

"Simply, because I have seen him start and change color in a very curious manner more than once, from apparently inadequate causea." "No, sir, his heart is as sound as a roach," returned the doctor, abruptly; "I wish I could eav as much for all my—patients. Well, I must wish you 'good night' here, Carlyon."

Don't eut poor Good-night, Caretairs. Crawford out of your visiting list because you are not sure if his family came in with the Conqueror. Make inquiries; or give him the benefit

Laughing gayly, the young squire strode away up the bill. The churchyard cast no shadow of eath upon him to night as he passed it swiftly The moonlight sleeping on the bay had no power to make him sad. When a woman has in his presence; but, out of it, when he had passed the heyday of her life, she never degone away no wiser than he came—not betceives herself in respect to that matter, notwithstanding that she may use all her withstanding that she may use all her art to deceive others; but with us men it is different. There is an Indian summer in many a man's life; a period, always brief indeed, but of uncertain duration, which takes place after youth has fied, and lie flight been acknowledged. It is fostered by the sunshine of a woman's love, often only to be nipped by the frost of her indifference. Then winter sets in indeed.

This second summer had suddenly befallen John Carlyon. He had never been in such high spirits, or felt so full of life since the time—a score of years ago—when he was a bay.

"I ought to have told him from the first," mused Mr. Carstairs, gloomily, as he lit the flat candle left for him as usual is his little hall.

"My plan for that poor fellow's welfare has sadly mirearried. Instead of her doing him good she has done him harm. He has fallen in love with her, head over ears. What a fasce have I made of it! Well, I will tell Carlyon to-morrow at all heards. I was a coward not to do it is now when noncontribute offsets her he morrow at all basards. I was a coward not to do it just now when opportunity offered; but he scemed so full of hope and life, p8or fellow, that I had not the heart."

OHAPTER XIL

SERTCHING RED BERILD.

In pursuance of his previous night's resolve the doctor called at Woodlees first in his morning's round; he had taken one foot out of the stirrup, making sure of his man at that early hour, when Robin stopped him with, "The young route's out, Mr. Caretairs;" then added, in a confidential tone, "he has ridden over to Greyoraga." And his old eyes twinkled with unaccostomed wirth. "There mayn't be anything in it, you know; I don't say there is," continued he, "but it would be a great shing for the old house, as you remember, in the old times, to have a missos, and Miss Agnes, by all accounts, is just the one to do him good."

"Yes, Robin, perhaps so," responded the doctor, thoughtfully, not at all astonished by the terms in which the anoient retainer spoke of his young master and his affairs. Carlyon's apiritual case was considered "interesting" by In pursuance of his previous night's resolve spiritual case was considered "interesting" by all the orthodex about Mellor, and as many diferent remedies had been recommended by all classes, as are volunteered for the whooping cough. "I will estl again to morrow, or the Day after day went on, and Mr. Carstairs called and called again at Woodleer, but saw nobody but Robin, whose servile smirk was now exchanged for a broad and very unbecoming grin. "I have done my duty," murmured the little doctor to himself on each occasion; then antered away, not sorry that his mission had ended where it did, like an unwilling church-goer who duly presents himself at the sacred edifice and finds there is no room for him. In the meantime Red Berild—very gradually, for Carlyon, when matters were going too fast, would make critical objections, and cause a whole leg to be rubbed out—was being transferred to paper. He was permitted to come upon the lawn, where he stood, now making futile efforts to crop the short-shaven sward, now advancing towards his master and the fair artist, to complain perhaps of the too great efcacy of the gra French Government when revolution threatens, Agnes always gave him bread upon such occasions, which she kept by her in necessarily large quantities for purposes of erasure. The three nade a very pretty picture; Agnes sitting upon that camp stool reclaimed from Ocean, Carlyon stretched at her feet, with his fine face bathed in sunshine; and the great horse champing his bit, as though proudly conscious that he was being handed down to posterity. On the terraced walk, half way up the wooded hill, sat Richard Crawford, always with the same book in his band, and the same leaf of the book open before him.

At unfrequent intervals Mr. Crawford senior's skeleton form would stalk out of the house, and cast its gaunt shadow over the preoccupied pair. "How good it was of Mr. Carlyon to give up his usual geliop on the hill-side, or 'over sands,' in order to indulge his daughter's whim in this fashion. What a very magnificent creature although he (Mr. Crawford) for his part was no horseman, nor a judge of horses—was Red Berlid! He did hope so much that Mr. Carlyon would henor his poor house [lanch being inva-riably over before the old gentleman put in an appearance], by remaining to dinner."

Thus matters went on—with the exception of the wit days, that are "neither few nor far between" about Mellor, and on which there was no excuse for Carlyon's coming-for weeks. The conversation between him and Agnes had hitherto never centred upon religious matters, since the occasion of his first vait to Greyerage. Each felt that that was the only ground not e mison to both, and, although one of them most earnestly desired that it should be made so, she shrunk from the contest for fear of its possible result. Not that she had any appresension for her own firm faith ; not that she was without hope of turning his noble soul to the truth; but, if she failed to conquer, something told her that they two would have to part; and she was so happy as things were. Happy

"Preach the word: be instant in season, out of season; reprova, rebuke." Had these words been addressed to Timothy only, or to all true professors of the faith? She would repeat them to herself, even while he was speaking to her in his low earnest tonce, as though they were a charm against witchery. At last the oppor-tunity long wished for, long shrunk from, of-fered itself.

He was speaking of Stephen Millet, now, notwithstending his late lesson, and vehement pro-testations of amendment, become even a greater sot then before, and a source of poverty as well as wretchedness to his son.

"The peor fellow has had to sell his very fur lyon. "When I think of William Millet, and of my Lord Disney over yonder, it really almost precept of 'Live your enemies,' protects its own foes, while it persecutes its friends."

That is indeed only seeming, Mr. Carlyon.

The happiest man in all this parish, the richest (in all true riches), the wiscet, the best, is Wil-Fret not threelf because of evil doers, of him who prospereth in the way, and bringeth evil devices to pass. Nay, do you believe in your immeet heart that such a man as Lord

Diency is happy?"
"Most certainly I do, my dear Miss Agnes, in so far as his capabilities permit. happy in the sense that you are happy, but he is happy enough for him. The middle classes of this country possess just so much religion as to make them uncomfortable. They have too little to constitute happiness, yet too much to permit of them enjoying themselves. Now the arisof them epjoying themselves. Now the aris-toorsey, to de them justice, are not restrained from indulging in any pleasure by considera-tions of its sinfulness. Nor do they lose the respect of society by so doing, for the Bible of the said middle classes in bound up with their Perage, and merely forms a supplement to it, un-less when they are at death's door, and the choice has to be abruptly made between their duty to the Lord of Lords, or to persons of title Even the clergy are thus divided in alleglance; or else, like some we wot of, they boldly throw in their lot with the latter, and be come, as it were, private chaplains to the hereditary aristocracy—than which occupation, by the-bye, in the literal came, I can fancy nothing quester. Think of it: Faul accepting the post of private soul keeper to a nobleman of the neighborhood; or atili worse (since it would be a splittud sinceure), to one not of the neighborhood. Upon the whole, I must say, for reli ous folks, that they have the smallest sense of humor, the greatest obtusences with respect to heir own anomalies and contradictions, and, ciples of their own creed of any people I know Have not the true faith with respect of persons —the whole chapter is addressed to these idiots; but it might just as well not have been written, we are told, since they grovel at the feet of any fellow creature, however base, who happens to have a tag to his name. Lock at the behavior of your religious folks about Maller, in regard to his lordship, for instance. My sister Meg is almost charitable when she speaks of his little percadillos. Mr. Puce himself dined at the great house last work, in company which I cannot speak of before you." He spoke with ancommon energy and parelon though never raising his voice beyond its usual tone; his cheeks flushed brightly, his eyes tiwhed scornful fire. Agues, on the other hand, grew very white, and her hand, so cold that it could scarcely hold the brush, frembled exceedingly. She felt that the time was come

This may be very true, Mr. Carlyon," returned she, after a pause, "concerning the pro-fessors of the truth—or at least some of them— because, as you say, they are ignorant of the very principles they profess. But if ignorant, why he angry with them? why scourge them why he angry with them; why they only (as with such terrible words, when they only (as you allow) need teaching? If we do not love The quid goes in when the pipe goes out, our brother whom we have known, how can we love God whom we have not known?"

lyon, smiling, "I think there is something wrong ut that text, for I am sure I should have a never had the misfortune to know her. Still, as the sits all day in a smoke or for, you hint, my expressions were not charitable,

The puff, puff, puff, and I retract them. Come, you see you are the growle at his wife, the cat, and the dog, doing me good, reproduce that I might have behaved And his only reply when I give him a jog, ich worse by railing against religion itself, instead of its professors. "I cannot go with you there, Mr. Carlyon,"

The house all over, from end to end, plied Agues, gravely. "I have always held
Is smoke, smo lied Agues, gravely. that to speak evil reukleesly against our fellowcreatures is worse than to epeak blasphemy against the Most High. We cannot hurt llim by anything we say. He can redress his own rouge in a terrible fashion; we are very sure that, although He may not use the thunderbot upon the instant. But Man, whom he has also bidden men to love, is weak; our words may injure him in reputation-in a thousand nay they may embliter his very soul

'And do you say the same of deeds, Miss Agnes, in relation to man and his Creator ? Undoubtedly. Can any sacrilege be equa eppression the very highest excillege against poor, who are God's peculiar people," Very good, and very true," asid Carlyon Toen the six of unbelief, the intellectual mistune of not being able to credit the state ments of the Bible, you must allow is not to be ompared in point of enormity to the sin of ading a wicked—that is, a cruel and remove

Agree was eilent: her heart beat so strongly he heard the horse cropping the grass; she thought she heard her ever-watchful cousing ever-watchful cousin to le en to her reply.

"If faith without works is dead," continued Carlyon, carneally, "faith with bad works must be surely rotten. Now what I want to know is this-I am not speaking of myself in the matter, for I do nothing to boast of, God knows-but are good works without faith in your opinion valueless, Miss Agnes ?"

If he was not speaking of himself, it was, she well knew, of him that abe had to speak, when she should answer. There were texts enough ready to her hand, crushing ones, final ones, such as Mr. Puce would have clapped on quickly enough, like hatches upon a mutinous crew in the Tropice, and yet she heeltated. A hareh and tion to avert. He had never given himself the opportunities of grace—what if she should throw away this chance by any spiritual indiscretion, and so through her (of all people) this soul (of all souls) should perish!

"You say you do not speak of yourself, Mr. Carlyon; but I cannot affect to agree with you—at least, altogether—in that. Is it possible that you have no helief in religion?"

that you have no belief in religion ?"

"I do not quite any that," returned Carlyon nkly; "it is indeed impossible to be so rank frankly; "it is indeed impossible to be so rank an infidel in the presence of so pure a dis

She stopped him with a reproving finger, and a face very stern and sad.
"Do not trifle with me, Mr. Carlyon;

may an or time with me, Mr. Carryon; but answer me honcetly, and like if that is all I may adjure you by—and like a gentleman."
"Well, dear lady, I will say this much. Your religion is good for poor folks, I do believe, and admirably adapted for them, although, as I have said, the upper classes can make nothing of it. Your remark about William Millet, for instance, was in my conjulon a just one. He instance, was in my opinion a just one. comforts himself in the absence of earthly bless ings, with dreams of heaven. The weightier his cross here, the richer, he thinks, his crown hereafter. The devout countrymen of our friend Mistrees Cubra, who hope to gain Paradise by self-torture, present only an exaggerated phase of the same superstition. Don't be angry with me, Agnes," added he, pleadingly, tenderly; "don't look like that. I was obliged to be honest with you. You would not have had me tell you a his." tell you a lie.

She shook her head, and her lips moved twice or thrice without sound. "No," murmured she, presently; "I suppose a lie would have been worse even than what you have said. I am not angry, sir, God knows —I almost wish I were; but I would have given this right hand to have heard you answer ferently. The Psalmist says that he never be held the seed of the righteous begging their bread; but, how much more terrible that the son of a righteous man should deny

She dropped her head upon her lap, and wept is dearest to her.

"Shall I tell you, Miss Crawford," said Carlyon, in an altered voice, not moved by her tears, but cold and bitter in its tone, "shall I tell you how it was I became a heretic?"
"Became, sir it is not possible that such as you can have once found God and then lost

Him. And yet I have heard of comeshing of this before; with such a father it could not be but that you were brought up in the right way; and after that to go astray! Alas! alas! 'it is impossible,' it is written, 'if they shall then fall way, to renew them again."

The despair in the young girl's face was unepeakable, as though, with those tender eyes, he had herself seen the open door of heaven closed in his face.

"Miss Crawford, I am beyond measure shock-"Miss Grawford, I am beyond measure snock-ed to have caused you such pain; I was about to say—not in justification, indeed, but in ex-planation of my opinions, that there had been reasons unguessed at—"

The with God sorbites shall be impossible."

But with God nothing shall be impossible," marmured Agnes, under her breath; "why did not I think of that before? Yes, yes. I beg your pardon, sir, you were saying..."

"I was about to tell you comething that has been a secret between me and the dead for many a year. Promise me to keep it, when you have heard it, as though it had never been told." I promise

" Listen, then." (TO BE CONTINUED)

THE HUSBAND WHO USES TOBACCO.

He sits in the chair from morning till night. 'Tis emoke, chew, amoke The emoke, chew, amoke;
He rises at dawn his pipe to light,
Goes puffing and chewing with all his might Till the hour of sleep. 'Tis his delight
To smoke, chew, smoke.

brother whom we have known, how can we e God whom we have not known?"

Indeed, my dear Mies Agnes," rejained Carnamille, "I think there is semething wrong, then his mouth sends a constant stream affoat, Sufficient to carry a mill or a boat, 'Tis chew, chew, che

Is smoke, smoke, smoke, To whatever room my way I wend, If I take his old clothes to patch and mend, Ungrateful perfumes will ascend, Of smoke, smoke, smoke

At home or abroad, afar or near, Tis smoke, chew, smoke; His mouth is stuffed from ear to ear, Or puffing the stump of a pipe so dear, And his days will end, I verily fear In smoke, smoke, smoke

At the University Convention at Albany, ther stated that certain kinds of food were nourishing to the brain than others. He more nourishing to the brain than others. He ment, that this confession of identity to Surgeon stated that "if a scholar cannot resolve a pro- McWillian was the first positive trace obtained blem easily, his brain should be strengthened of him. He was closely watched, but fit by a good can of tripe. The superiority of imysteriously disappeared, and all trace of scotchmen is owing to out meal, and the de-

The Paris Liberte tells the following of Lopez, who betraved Maximilian : The Colonel was one day surprised at the head man, and, sided by him, the agents of the of a equadron by a considerable ambush of the Government sgain resumed the pursuit. Arrnemy. As heroism is not positively his forte, he commanded a retreat, and turned his horse's head. In his flight the animal received a ball and fell. A soldier, in his extreme peril, took the Colonel up behind him, but the borse having double weight, elacked his pace, and the enemy by the United States Marshal, "Is your name approached rapidly. Lopes understood that if John II. Surrant;" he quickly and nervously annothing was done they were both lost; and so swered affirmatively. The pursuit of Surrant

A sub-dean was talking to a dean about titles accorded to church dignitaries, in the tone of a man who feels himself aggrieved. "An archbishop," said be, "is a most reverend, a "is a most reverend, a bishop is a reverend, and a dean is a very revethe Tropios, and yet she heeltated. A harsh and trend. I hon't you think a sub dean should have uncharitable dogma from her lips—that is, one that would seem so to this unregenerate man —might do the very mischief it was her inten.

How would rather reserved do?"

by cancelence.

There has lately been recorded another less that would seem so to this unregenerate man which conscience has revealed a crime, and

PHILADELPHIA, SATURDAY, 31P'R 7, 1867.

Norica.-We do not return rejected manu scripts, unless they come from our regular cor-respondents. Any postage stamps sent for such return will be confiscated. We will not be responsible for the safe keeping or return of any manuscript.

OUR NOVELETS.

We commenced on July 27th, a new and faseinating novelet, called

CARLYON'S YEAR.

By the author of " Lost Sir Massingberd."

Our readers who remember that powerful and peculiar story, "Lost Sir Massingberd," will need no persuasion to induce them to read "Carlyon's Year"-the interest of which, they will perceive, commences in the very first chapter.

whole of the powerful novelet of "LORD ULS-WATER," can be had upon application

Back numbers to May 4th, containing the

We can also supply a few back numbers to the first of the year.

Conscience as a Detective.

"Oh, coward Conscience, how thou doet afflict me !" exclaimed the immortal bard. he meant to say "accuse me," for in his time and even long before, conscience was a sort of public accuser and prosecutor. It has also al-ways played a prominent part as a detective— has been, in fact, a veritable Chief of Detectives. It had much to do, though not in the interest of the internal revenue, in exposing the illicit distillation of apple juice on the part of our first parente, as well as in exposing Cain's first at-tempt at a quibble. It even played the part of public executioner in the famous case of Ananias and Sapphira; and I have always imagined that it must have made Peter think that that cock crowed with unusual and unnecessary force. is an immense source of revenue to the Church of Rome at this day; and even under the State and Church governmental organization of the their corporation rings. In fact, it has been in all ages and countries a strong instrument of truth and justice; and has done more than any other one power, faculty, or thing, to give uni-versal acceptance to the old saying that "mur-der will out."

There are many remarkable instances of the eingular way in which conscience has hunted down criminals. It hunted down John H. Sur-rait: the story of his flight and detection is one of the most remarkable of these narratives on record. At the moment the murder of Mr. Lin-coln was committed by Booth, Surratt was on his way from Mourical to Washington city to his way from Montreal to Washington city to act as an accomplice, and had reached the town of Elmira, New York, when he first heard that the horribic deed was done. He immediately turned to fly, and made his way to Canada with out suspicion, and was concealed there for several months. So completely lost was all trace of him that the Government expended a montha great deal of money in searching for him at the South, and a man who recembled him was ar-rested in Mississippi, and confined for many weeks in Washington. In September, 1865—five months after the commission of the crime and the withdrawal of the proclamation offering a reward for his arrest, so entirely lost was all trace of him-Surratt took passage, under an assumed name and thoroughly disguised, in the Dueboc eteamer Peruvian for Liverpool. On board be introduced himself to the surgeon, L. J. McMillian. Although McMillian had up to that time been a perfect stranger to him, not even his opinions on our war being known to the criminal, Surratt insisted on talking about imself. No other subject seemed to have any nterest for him; and so persistently did he refer to bimself and his exploits, that Surgeon McMil-lian began to look on him as a weak-minded At first he represented that he had his exploits; next he told, in great confidence, that he had planned with Both the abduction, not the assessmation, of President Lincoln; then that the Government had very unjustly hung his mother, exclaiming in his passion that he "hoped to live long enough to serve Andrew Johnson as he had served Lincoln." And finally, impelled by his guilty conscience or that si gular vanity possessed by many great criminals, announced that he was John H. Surratt. Be fore this his track had been completely covered; he was perfectly safe from suspicion or arrest his conscience, "stealing away his brains," led him to talk, talk, talk; and now it appears, by the official correspondence of the State Departof him. He was closely watched, but finally was again lost, until conscience impelled him, generacy of the present inhabitants of Massa-through his insane desire to talk of himself, to chusetts to the use of fine wheat flour." Zonaves, in which troop he had enlisted. Detective Conscience found a co-operator in this reeted, Surratt escaped and fled to Alexandria Egypt, but was again arrested and sent to this country. On the voyage he repeatedly denied he drew a pistol from his belt, shot the soldier in the back, threw down the corpse, and then ward for his detection is ever paid it will doubt-escaped alone."

was continued for nearly two years. If any remarks the back, threw down the corpse, and then ward for his detection is ever paid it will doubt-less go to McMillian and St. Marie; but it should, in all justice and honesty, be transferred to Treasurer Spinner's "Conscience Fand," for un-doubtedly Surratt was hunted down by his own guilty conscience, and the chief witnesses again him have been, as one might say, subprensed

"Ill gotten gains befog men's brains; Ill-gotten wealth reveals the stealth."

A paymester in the United States Navy, named Belknep, was rebbed in 1868 of Govern ment funds to the amount of $180,000. His safe was broken open and the money extracted in the most mysterious manner; no trace was left by the burglars, and their success was com-plete. Mr. Belknap could not explain his loss, much less give any clue to the robbers; the burglary became more complicated the more it was inquired into; and finally Mr. Belknap fell under suspicion, and a Board of Inquiry had his name decorated from the rolls. Nothing could name dropped from the rolls. Nothing could be proved against him, however, and no criminal prosecution followed. But Mr. Belknap was not content to remain quiet under the unjust suspicion of the Government, and actively con tinued his search for the culprits. Nearly three years were spent in the search without finding any clue likely to lead to the detection of the robbers, when a professional detective heard that a broker in Wall street, named Dewitt C. Wright, had declared that Paymaster Belknap had just the money at cards. The detective, who appears to have held this theory to be the true one, sought Mr. Wright and heard the declaration from his own lips. He also premised to give full particulars of the time, place, and circumstances under which the money had been lost; but though repeatedly urged to do so finally avoided giving the facts in detail. The detective set to work, and soon satisfied himself beyond doubt that Belknap had never gambles in his life. Naturally this discovery led to in-quiries as to the motives of Wright in making the statement; inquiries led to suspicions; suspicions were confirmed by certain facts elicited A year was devoted to learning about Wright's A year was devoted to learning about winds a antecedents. By this time he had left New York and gone into business at Charleston, South Carolina. Here he was dogged, hunted down and finally arrested, it having been dis-covered that he had not only commisted the burglary in question, but many others, and that he had been a deeperate character in England The sole clue by which he was dogged, finally detected, was furnished by himself in his insane and useless attempt to further secure his own safety by destroying the character of the man he had robbed. Conscience has not only done universal ser vice as a detective, but has played a not insignificant national part as a United States Reve nue officer; and a very considerable amount stands on the books of United States Treasurer Francis E Spinner to the credit of the "Conscience Fund," as the account is technically called. The history of the "Conscience Fund" is not without interest and entertainment. The account was opened in 1861, soon after the breaking out of the Rebellion, and on the receipt of the sum of $6,000, forwarded in bonds, and accompanied by a statement that the restitution which had long been due the Government was prompted by Conscience. This gave count its name. It has since remained open and all amounts returned to the Treasury in consequence of the prickings of the inward monitor (which in too many instances reems to be iron-clad) have been credited to it until it showed, at the end of 1866, a balance of over thirty-five thousand dollars. The sums vary in size, ranging from one cent, contributed by one who signed himself "Beggar Jimmy," to the original remittance of $6,000. Treasurer Spin ner has preserved a great many of the letters which accompanied the remittances, and by his kindness in severing the red tape of the es-tablishment I was enabled to get copies of a few of the more interesting. The majority of bona fide conscientious correspondents either gave no explanation, or contented themselves with very brief statements of the reasons for the return of the money, without attempting the bootless task of working upon the tender feel ings of Trassury officials. Judging from these letters, the correspondents are chiefly who have defrauded the Government acting as its agents and officers, or who have evaded the Internal Revenue taxes or customs duties. Among the more interesting of the letters of the hona fide conscience-stricken are the

" Dear Sir :- Several years ago a small sum of money belonging to the United States was left in my hands with an order from the Depart-ment, to which it belonged, to me to retain it till payment should be required by the Depart-ment. This requisition has never been made, Oblige him very much by investing the Euclosed and probably never will be. As the property is not mine, I send it, with interest added, to you, knowing you will put it to the use of the United States, to whom it belongs. The sum was ori-ginally $50. I inclose $100, thinking that will discharge my obligations. May I ask a brie intimation to the public press that the inclosed

$100 has reached you safely? "With high consideration, a lover of our glori-ous Union, which will live and flourish for ages through the power and mercy of God, if prove ourselves worthy of such interposition, if

"Hop. Francis E. Spinner, Treasurer of the

It can hardly be said that this rectitution was at can hardly be said that this rectifition was dictated by conscience, as the writer would have been justified in retaining it. It is related of Mr. Lincoln that a sum was left by the Government in his hands on his retirement from a poeition as a country postmaster. Many years after a demand was made for it, when he promptly drew forth an old stocking from his dosk, and delivered up the exact sum in the pieces of coin received by him years efore.

"MAY, 1860.—Sir :- Enclosed are twenty-five hundred dollars due U. S. Treasury. Please cause this sum to be placed to the credit of the BARRE oblige'

The Treasury clark who opened the mail ringing this letter was somewhat exercise finding that it contained only $1,500 instead o $2,500 as stated therein. But this was accounted for by the following, received a short time afterwards :

"SIR :- Enclosed are One Thousand Dollars (1,000). Please place this sum to credit of United States Treasury. It is the balance of my indebtedness to United States Internal Revenue Dept. I remitted $1,500 some weeks since

The following contain suggestions which, if received and acted upon by all who were equally guilty, when in the army, of the same practices, would go a great way towards bastening an early return to specie payment:

SATURDAY BUBNING POST. | given additional proof that Hudibras was right | is check for $190. I will briefly explain why it is check for $190. I will briefly explain why it is there. I have been in the U. S. Service and a part of the time with rank which entitled me to two servants. I drew pay for two, but actually had but one. It was the common practice of officers to do this, and the Paymasters were well aware of it. But though I do not think it exactly a wrong to the Gov't, it is yet a wrong, and I have always regretted doing it. I entered the army poor and sick—too poor, in fact, to get along well without a clear conscience.

"But is it right for Government to hold up such a premium to her officers to avasion of the exact truth? Ask tens of thousands who have done as I did this question.

"Very respectfully,

"John L. Markham."

"P. S.—The above is estimated for seven months with in't at 7 2-10. I hardly need say that the name is assumed.

J. L. M."

"To the Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.—I transmit herewith Ninety-one Dollars and thirty cents money that my conscience tells me I cannot keep commutation money for a servant that I exacted when I was not entitle. to it and not having a servant employed. I was a quartermaster Capt & A. Q. M. and having 'contrabands' employed in the Dept. I used one as my servant and charged for my servant also, which was wrong. I send the money with in-terest at 7.30 per cent. Also commutation for a servant for 20 days while I was not on duty and pervant for 20 days had no servant employed.

Respectfull, $2."

Many of the letters on file in the Department are from joccee correspondents, who have not scrupled to make light of so serious a matter as to address to the Treasurer pretended "conscience letters," whose humor, or desperate at-tempts at it, were far in excess of the money Among the best of these humoro letters is the following : "Sir :- Enclosed please find seventy-five cents (75) fractional currency, won from a U. S. Pay-master at draw poker, and which I am convinced rightly belongs to 'Uncle Samuel.' I have carried it for nearly six months, and dare not trust myself with it longer. Once, in an unguarded moment, I offered it to the door-keeper of Canterbury, but that incorruptible sentinel gave a look of reproof from the toe of his boot which went to my heart—or thereabouts. I came home a wiser and a madder man, and am determined to follow the noble example of many of my countrymen. My conscience calls for relief— My harrassed nature demands the luxury of a good night's sleep. I can have neither so long as I carry these terrible witnesses. They haunt me day and night. They are more frightful in my eyes than the last fifty cent issue which the little children are buying up fer comic valen-tines. Take it and do what you can with it. You can at least sell it for old paper, and let the proceeds apply in liquidation of the national

Now can I feel a realization of the proverb Be virtuous, and you will be happy !' Now can I feel an assurance that in years yet to come, it may be said of my children (yet to come), 'they were of poor but honest parients!"

"Please acknowledge receipt through the morning papers, and request them to put it in double leaded lines, just beneath the regular standing editorial on Reconstruction. Conscientiously yours, PROBITT."

Enclosed in this were a fifty-cent note and a thenty-five cent note, both counterfeit. From the style and careful punctuation of this letter, and the request that it be inserted in "double-leaded lines," it was surmised that it was probably from a correspondent of a newspaper or some one connected with the press.

"Sir :- A clear conscience softens the hardest bed—a proverb says—and as I am a poor go-vernment clerk my bed is very hard and needs much softening—so I herewith return money which I cannot conscientiously keep—having loafed considerably the other day. "Yours respectfully, C. M. E."

Inclosed in this was a fragment-a little more han half-of a dilapidated five-cent note.

Here is a quiet thrust at Congress : "Aug. 8th, 1866 .- Sir : - The Enclosed Dilapidated 10 cent Note is from a Conscience Stricken Soldier who Received just that much more Bounty than he ought to in 1862 and as the last act Passed by our Noble and Generous Congress gives an Extra 100 Dollars why he is afraid he o cents Fractional Currency in the Great National Soldiers Gift Concert and Draw a Brick house (if you can) and give it to the Fenians.
"Yours truly Ho. Bo."

to the honable treasurer of the U. S. A. "please find inclosed $22 due the U. office department consions money from an un-faithful officer who has repented."

It was suggested by the matter-of-fact Treasurer who enjoys his joke buge y, that the writer hadn't thoroughly and entirely repented, as the inciceure was short 75 cents of the amount stated, and contained $1.50 counterfeit notes.

Thus much for Conscience as a revenue-officer. It will readily be admitted that he basn's done his whole duty in this line, and has not been so successful as a Collector as in his role of Detecvinced. Talking of the "conscience letters" on file in his office, he once said, no doubt with as much truth as good humor, that "it is to be regretted that the workings of the spirit which animated the writers has not been more extensively experienced and obeyed by more imp tant offenders; for I venture the statement the if all the big rascals had followed the example of the smaller ones who have contributed to the 'conscience fund,' we would have extinguished the national debt long ago."

'Tis never too late to mend," and some of the "big rascale" may yet take warning, or be-come conse ence-stricken. - Harper's Mayazine for August.

A youth was lately leaving his aunt's louse after a visit, when, finding it we ning to rain, he caught up an umbrella that was enugly placed in a corner, and was proceeding to open is, when the old lady, who, for the first time observed his movements, sprang toward him, exclaiming: "No, no, that you never shall. I've had that umbrells twenty three years, and it has never been wet yet; and I'm sure it shan't be wetted now !"

Rev. E. E. Hale says the adjective blamed" is the virtuous oath by which simple eturn to specie payment:

Boston, February 15, 1866.—Sir:—Enclosed people, who are improving their habits, care themselves of a stronger epithet, just as men who are abandoning tobacco take to flagroot.

How a Kingdom was Lost.

An Oriental king, despotic and capricious, one day amused himself with the performances of an Indian magician. No evil spirit from the regions of darkness could surpass this man in the fearful accomplishments of his art. He ed to possess a subtle power over the wills neemed to possess a subtle power over the while and tempers of men, as well as over the elements and operations of nature. His jugglery greatly fascinated the oredulous monarch, who smiled increased satisfaction at every new exhibition of the man's wonderful power. His surprise and delight, however, reached a boisterous climax, when the magician took suddenly the power of utterance from the Grand Visier, who had just made a disparaging comment on his skill.

The high functionary glared fearful revenge from his dilating eyes, and his foolish attempts to speak only served to increase the merriment of the king and the assembled courtiers. This was the crowning feat. Triumphantly the ma-gleian was gathering up his instruments,— crowding crucible, tripid and incense pans, into a capacious bag, when the king cried:

Hold, mighty magician ! restore to this man e of his tongue, and he shall give thee elt of gema, which, by my faith, might well befit royalty itself."

The dusky face of the soroerer lighted up as he stretched out his lank hand for the treasure, he stretched out his lank hand for the treasure, which the poor minister, loth to part with, was slowly unfastening.

His wicked eyes gloated a moment over the costly article, then hiding it in his bosom, gave to the unfortunate man the use of his tongue, and was about taking his departure, when the king commanded him to remain. This monarch was selfish and cruel as well as credulous, and the preposition he made to the enchanter was the proposition he made to the enchanter was amount of treasure, he was to silence forever, completely and irretrievably, the tongues of all e women in the kingdom.

The magician regarded the king with openeyed astonishment. He looked up into the lofty dome, then down at the gay mats. This was an unanticipated test of his skill. He hesitated he trembled violently. Whether he feared it was beyond the power of an angel or demon to silence a woman's tongue, or whether this far-sighted man recoiled from the disastrous consequences which might follow, does not appear oertain it is, the sorcerer wa The monarch softly insinuated: was embarrassed.

The mighty Papiaub has not thy equal "The mighty Punjaub has not thy equal among his five waters," but, perceiving his hesitancy, and also a slight movement on his part to place the sweeping folds of the curtained door to tween himself and royal patronage, the king grasped his robe. "Quickly, quickly, I'll double the reward," cried he. "Do not trifle with me! I am terrible! The sons of presumption are already blind with the flash of my ecimetar, and contract have die at my whipper!"

tortured knaves die at my whisper !"
"Sire," said the affrighted magician, "wouldst thou not spare the devoted, the soft-voiced women? They breathe a crown of benediction for thy head, and enchant the pavillions of thy eu-preme majesty with the melody of paradise. Oh, king! if her voice die, earth's sweetest sounds will die also, for it is the embodiment of them all." barbarian! what knowest thou of all this? I tell thee, there is no howl of tempest, there are no howl of tempest, nor acream of bird, no hiss of serpent, nor laugh of demon, that can compare with the voice of Zobeide, and she is only one. Gossip, lies, conspiracies and robelion, have I traced to their diabolical tongues. They have caused the down-fall of kirgdoms, and the feilure of the most righteous of governments. By the white steed of the Prophet, thou shalt do this thing!" t, thou shalt do this thing!

He paused, then his voice sweetly modulated. "Magician, I love thee, and will give thee ves-cels, encrusted with rubies and emeralds, chains of sapphire and amethyst, if thou wilt instantly and forever seal those chattering tongues—ease me of this one torment of my existence!"

The magician looked incredulous. Then the king produced his treasure, and the temptation that lies in gold and in the gleam of precious stones, overcame the scuples of the sorcerer, and from that moment a demon fell upon the daughters of that land. With every curl of the incense, with every word of the incantation, it deepened and spread.

Above, amid the fretted arabosque of the Above, and the fretted arabosque of the dome, it stole like an unhallowed mystery. Singing birds, in their gilded rings, became mute. Below, where the colored light lay like a "shivered rainbow," the fountains, among their towering roses and exotios, showered their Butterflies and gorgeous humming birds, lured from the sunny terraces without, hushed the drowsy murmur of their wings as they floated through the bright saloon, and a sweet, low voice singing in a distant chamber, faintly, very faintly, came at intervals; then stopped forever. Never again in sunlight or starlight, in sorrow or in joy, shall that voice disturb the peace of aught upon the earth; disturb the peace of aught upon the earth; never again shall its eloquent appealing, its persuasive gentleness be known. It has exhaled like perfumes and is lost. It has ceased like the fading out of a star.

All the exquisite ministry of beauty and love departed as the spell pervaded the lovely pre-cincts of the palace. It rested not. It went out over the great city. It penetrated as well the maneion of the merchant prince as the booth of the poor clive vender-it hushed the din in the bazaar and silenced the loquacious water carrier. The girl dropped her burden in diamay and wrung her hands. The enchanter pro nounced his spell fearfully perfect. The royal ecstacy was unbounded.

Embracing the grinning soroerer with un-dignified warmth, the monarch invisted upon his accompanying him to observe the workings of He betrayed no curiosity, however, that direction; indeed, he submitted with dogged reluctance, and no sooner did he breathe the fresh air of the cuter court, than the won-derful conjurer of the Punjaub started like an arrow from the royal cortege and was gone Tradition is silent upon his fate. If eve morse consumed away an existence, it did his: doubtless, like the winged eye in the Indian story, it tortured him eternally with its sleepless

But what a spectacle to excite kingly merri-Crowds of frantic women in the thoroughfares, wringing their hands and tearing their hair, insanely trying to speak. Stately ladice quite dumb, yet retaining sufficient selfpossession to wrap closely their long veils about them, and hurrying with their servants home-Pretty, coquettish damsels in siry yash-

の意味

exhibiting here the most woeful distress, and there a frantic surprise that was painfully touching. Like a flock of white pigeons they wonted spectacle of so many young women with unveiled faces, so startled some old musselmes. that they sneezed violently, and immediately lost

Oh, magician, shame and confusion must have consumed thee, or is it possible that thou dides saugh at beholding this calamity? No more satisfactory spending of money, no more intelligent interchange of opinion concerning the fashions, no more flirting on the promenade; ah! no more love-making in all that kingdom. But, too fast, we are bringing the matter home. These are the irresistible charms peculiar to the daughters of our own time. The fair Oriental is till in bondage. There is a silly modesty and sly reserve in her nature that are very ancient. ly reserve in her nature that are very ancient s though she would say, "I am nothing, bright ister, but a bird to neetle in your bosom, and sing to you, if you will love me; or a garden zephyr, to whisper in your ear all happy things; or a butterfly, to circle and shine about you, and exchant you with my presence." All this is so barbaric and amusing, but when this vile spell of silence fell upon her, it completed the great!" shouted the muezzine from the gleam ing minarets, but the praying women were dumb! Oh, king, where was thy wisdom, thy foreeight? Shall a monarch prosper who ignored this source of his greatness? Thou hast indeed forgotten that the Koran says: "The prayers of the devout women are a wall of defence unto

The king hastened on, but presently observ-The king hastened on, but presently observ-ing some violent commotion in a booth, gay with silver tissue and scarlet cushions, stopped to enjoy the spectacle. Here was a group of stylish, gossipping dowagers, who but a moment before had been puffing their cigarettes, sipping their coffer, munching their sweetmeats, and at the same time discussing with garrulous satis-faction, any appetizing morsel of scandal con-cerning the royal harem, or recent moral lanes. cerning the royal harem, or recent moral lapse in their neighbors' conduct. Now, like a scene in a play, everything was changed in a moment. The old ladies became frightfully enraged, each one clutching her neighbor as the fancied cause of witchcraft, and visiting vengeance in violent hair-pulling, face-scratching, and a general flinging about of china cups and saucers. To make the tumult more interesting, one robust lady, who had received the contents of a bowl of con serves on her head, whipped off her slipper, and dealt about her such stinging blows, in such un-locked for directions, that his majesty, crowding forward to obtain a nearer view, received one of the lady's favors, fair in the face. This was mortifying. A disordered moustache and a red nose are becoming to but few, and certainly did not improve the appearance of the Brother of the Sun. The syrup running down over her eyes, obscured a nice perception of situations, and she followed up her momentary advantage by clear-ing the booth—king, retinue and all, retiring with no little precipitancy.

The new order of things exhibited a multitude of sad and mirthful scenes. For many hourthe royal cortege enjoyed themselves as never before. Anon, the sun began to decline in the west, and the king was sated. The harsh voices of your and the prolonged guide sounds of the of men, and the prolonged, rude sounds of tu-mult and traffic, unsoftened by the sweet un-dertone of lapping fountains, singing birds, and the voices of a gentler humanity, began to grate upon the monarch's sensitive ear. It became at length unbearable, and he bent his steps languidly towards the palace.

All its magnificence was distasteful to him.
He wandered from one saloon to another, oppressed in spirit and very miserable. A sudden thought struck him—a half found hope that perhaps Zobeide had escaped, urged him to hurry to her side. His footsteps sounded upon the teastlated present like a document was guidly towards the palace. the tenselated pavement like a doom; at length the paused, and through the hush, the sad, lovely face raised its eyes, full of mournful, beseeching and tencer rebuke. "Beautiful Odalerque! dove-eyed Zobeide!" said the monarch, in his most winning way. Not a word could she utter! She nestled down frigid and impassive among her rose colored cushions, and awayed her jeweled fan.

A shade of supreme veration passed over the monarch's face "Speak, my Zobeide! Thy breath is the perfume of lilies, and thy voice the love-note of the bulbul among the roses! Not a word? Oh, torment of tormente! Oh, most miserable of men that I am! Gazelle, wilt thou evermore be torturing me with those appealing eyes?—will they good me in the sunlight and consume me in the shadow? Forbid it, Great Prophet!"

Thus did the recreant Oriental feel keenly how much of the exquisite charm of society, th grace and satisfaction of existence, lay in the gentle voice of woman. From that day the great monarch descended in the scale of human intelligence. Commerce, arts and religion lan-guished in that kingdom. The restraining ele-ment in society had been destroyed, and his subjects became unsurpassed in crime and deg-

As the news spread, his realm became the jest of surrounding kingdoms. Anarchy and ruin at length claimed it for their own, and obliterated

it from the list of nations. The fate of this people claims more than a passing regret. It is cloquent with warning. An incipient leaning of men's minds towards the barbarism of that day is discoverable in regard to this matter. Some have openly averred that woman's tongue possesses more volume than sweetness, more length than discretion, than sweetness, more more pertinacity than wiedom.

This is simply an antique misapprehension, taken up by minds of duli perceptions and low intellectual range.

Humanity, however, is prone to regard lightly its choicest blessings. Sunshine has even been traduced. A woman's gentle voice, like sunshine, needs no praise, as it is above all sulogy. Yet the poets have said acceptable things many times, and they show a just appreciation when they declare her voice to be light, beauty, and perfume made audible, an echo from Pa-

"Papa," said my bright-eyed little girl to me one day, "I believe mamma loves you better'n she does me" I held doubts on that subject, but I concluded that it was not best to deny the soft imprachment. She meditated thoughtfully about it for some time, evidently construing my silence as unfavorable to her side. "Well," she masks and yellow elippers, flying through the grand bazaar, laughing and weeping, flinging away their purchases, tearing off their veils, and the person giving it gives to anybody else.

Original Fables.

Too TIGHT MAKES LOOSE.

First went the beer through the hole from rhich it had driven the peg! The master hammered the peg in tight.

Fixs-fizz-fizz went the beer through a s The master plastered the seam with pitch. Bang went the beer through the bunghole all ever the cellar!

"It's a pity!" said the old Barrel, standing nearly empty, "but, if he had but left it a little liberty and breathing room, it wouldn't have taken the law into its own handa."

How to Dispose or Scapicious Attentions. "Oh, you dear creatures!" cried the Sparrows to the Chickens, who had just begun their bar to the Chickens, who had just begun their barley; "we couldn't rest without coming to see you: It seems such ages since our last visit!"

"Thank you, friende," said a cute young Chick; "I'm sure we are greatly obliged to you; and, as you are so deeply interested in us, it is only right to tell you that if you would come to laquire after us at any other than feeding time (which we notice you always choose for your visits), it would be much more to our profit, and, of course, to your disinterested satisfaction."

THE CHARITY THAT COVERETH FAULTS AND

"Dear Moss!" said the old Thatch, "I am so worn, so patched, so ragged; really I am quite unsightly. I wish you would come and cheer me up a little; you will hide all my infirmities and defects, and, through your loving sympathy, no finger of centempt or dislike will be pointed at me."

I come!" said the Moss; and it crept up and around, and in and out, till every flaw was hidden, and all was smooth and fair. Presently the sun shone out, and the old Thatch looked tioriously in the golden rays.
"How beautiful the thatch looks!" cried

"How beautiful the thatch looks!" cried

"Ah!" cried the old Thatch, "rather let them say how beautiful is the loving Moss, that spends itself in covering all my faults, keeping the knowledge of them all to herself, and by her own grace making my age and poverty wear the

SOME CHANCE FOR THE SILENT.

Ned had such a solemn face; he looked so wise, and moved so deliberately and discreetly, that every one on the common, when he first went there, felt a respect for him. "He is a reflecting fellow, I should think!"

remarked the Dun Cow, as she watched him grazing, while she chewed the cud. "I like your reflecting people !"
"Ob, yes; and he is evidently sensible and discriminating," said the old Mare. how he follows me wherever I go; at a distance, and quietly, but very constantly."

"That is because he has found out that you know where the best pasture is," said Dobbin, dryly; "and certainly it shows his sagacity. I have no doubt when we get more intimate with have no doubt when we get more intimate with him we shall all be much delighted with his so

Ned was so tickled with these flattering opl nions of his meries that he stuck up his head and gave two or three loud brays. "Who'd have thought it," said the Dun Cow, be is nothing but an ass, after all!"

Too Good to BE TRUE.

" Bob! Bob!" oried the Sparrows in high delight to a Robin that was hopping about pick-ing up what he could find; "such capital news; the men of the farm have taken pity upon us, and, knowing how much trouble we have in get-ting a living, they have thrown down ever so much corn; they have, indeed! There it is, open to any one; come off, for fear it should be

"Stop a minute," said Bob; "what made them put it there; was it for their own conve

"It couldn't be that," said the Sparrows: for it is thrown about in every direction."
"And no had ma dude put up to frighten us off," said Bob, with a skeptical cock of his

"Not one," said the Sparrows; "It is a clear case of benevolence; the corn is meant for us, depend on it."
"Let them eat it that believe it," said Robin; crumbs in the winter, and I pick them up without fear; but I must have a better opinion of the friendship of the men and their love for us than I have, before I venture on what I little doubt is only a poisoned balt. Don't you see vice, and be content with a bit here and a bit there, as I am, eating in safety, and don't risk your whole welfare on such suspicious offers."

VAIN GLORIOUS BOASTS END IN SHAME.

"Did you hear how the fox ran into Farmer Brown's yard and frightened every one to death?" said the Speckled Hen to the rest; and they all gathered round her to listen to the Don't be nervous, ladies," said a grand-look ing Cock, strutting up and down before them.

"Remember you are under my protection!"
"The fox! the fox!" screamed the Hens; and in he actually ran, the hounds after him.

The valiant Cock flew up to the top of the wall, while the Hens scattered off as fast as they wall, while the mens scattered on a rank as they could into the roosting place.

"He is gone!" cried one, peeping out. "Oh, yes; he is gone!" asid the rest; and they came, one by one, very cautiously down the roost ladder, and landed in the yard.

"Is he gone?" cried the Cock from the wall, "Yes, quite gone," they all cried.
"Then I may come down too," he said, and strutted about as before.

"I wouldn't leave my post, you see, ladies, while there was any danger," he said, majestically.

"Who doubte that?" said Shock, who had "You are heard him promise to protect them. "You are a brave defender, indeed. If your ladies had not had the roost to fly to, you would have help-much disconcerted and offended. "Oh, of course," said Snock; "you couldn't do anything but take care of yourself; and I ed them much from the top of you wall!"

silence se unfavorable to her side.

and at last, "I e'pone it's all right; you're the biggest, and it takes more to love you."

To it is surprising how little love we can be well content with, when that love is more than False pretences always make people contemptible."

Jengen By THE TROTH.

"What Ass come to us all! Yesterday, we "What Ass come to us all! Yesterday, we had irreproachable flooces—a faint blemish here or there, perhaps, but on the whole fair and comely. To-day, if I am like you, we are, alto-gether, the dinglest flock that ever stocked a meadow."

"Son," replied the old Sheep to the young one, which, with much perplexity, had thus addressed him, "we are just as we were yesterday, when you so admired us, and thought us, with when you so admired us, and thought us, with yourself, cleanly and bright; but you behold us now in contrast with this faultiess snow which fell last night, and which, by revealing our true color, shows how far—how very far—we are from purity."

A MISTARE ABOUT DRESS.

"See how pretty we look in our spring dresses, / and the Hedges," said the black old Thatch, covered with bright green moss.
"Do you hear her?" said the Hedges; "does she fancy because she puts on our colors people will think there is youth in her as in us? Poor old thing! she listle knows that where her man-tle is cracked she shows through, darker and uglier from the vivid contrast of her bright and

THE LOWEST FALL IS PROM THE HIGHEST PLACE. "Mother!" cried a young Lion, "what a grand thing it is to be king of the forest, and to reign in glory, making every heart shake with the sound of one's voice—listen!" and he roared till the air around trembled, and all the creatures fied in terror.

"Yes, my son," answered the old Lioness;
"it is a grand thing, no doubt;" and he said

"I, though so young oan already master an ox. In a few years I shall be in my prime, and then what will withstand me? I long for the time!"

"Be satisfied to wait," said the Lioness; "redeparted, and you will see one of two things be-fore you—death by starvation, or slaughter by one of the animals who now fly before you, and are contemptible in your sight. In this respect a lion is no better off than a mouse; and there is this to be said also, that, while the mouse has so little to lose, he will scarcely feel the change in his condition, the lion must smart with an-guish unutterable, remembering what he once

BALANCED BURTHENS COME LIGHT.

Poor fellow, poor fellow! What, two loads? said a Pack Horse to a friend, who had a bur-then hanging from each side. "I should have thought the one I saw you with yesterday was enough, without weighing you down with an

"Thank you for your pity," said the Friend; "you are kind, but master is very wise, and has done well by giving me this second load. It serves to halance the other, so that I feel both less now than I did one before."

VAIN CURIOSITY.

"What is in the middle of the earth?" asked the Magple, just as the mole came out of

"Why do you sek?" inquired the Mole.

"Because I should exceedingly like to know," said the Magple. said the magpie.
"I can't tell you, although I am almost always underground. I go but very little way down; so ask the trees, their roots penetrate far below me."

"What is in the middle of the earth?" said the Magpie to the old Elm, in which her nest was

"Oh, I should like to know, above all things," said the Magpie.
"How can I tell? My roots strike deep in deed, but are yet a short distance from the sur-face. The rivers go lower down than the oldest and deepest of us. Ask the rivers. "What is in the middle of the earth ?" asked the Magpie of the broad river that flowed by the "Why do you sak ?" Inquired the River. "Oh, I should be so pleased to find out," said the Magple. "Then you must be taught by the wisdom that spread me abroad," said the River. "I indeed am deep, and my stream is wide, but I know nothing beyond my limits. If you want knowledge such as lies in our range, I can teach you, or the old elm can teach you, or the mole but, if you only want to indulge a vain curiosity, know that no honest teacher who deals in the truth will be able to satisfy you."

Tray.
"Ay; a rough, slouchy looking fellow: half

Viennet, the great writer of fables and tile Nestor of the French Academy, saying: "Tell me how I must live to get up to ninety?" Viennet replied: "Write fables." An academic friend of both, on hearing of this interesting our respondence, exclaimed, "Them let us have arother volume of Gnizot's Memolis, and he will be sayed."

In supply of Heaf Cattle Market's Philadding the past week amounted in about 70% head. The prices resilized from itselfs, say B 25% Cover brought from 50% of the past week amounted in about 70% head. The prices resilized from itselfs, say B 25% Cover brought from 50% of the past week amounted in about 70% head with a prices resilized from 10.09 head. The prices resilized from 10.09 head. The prices resilized from 10.09 head of the past week amounted in about 70% head. The prices resilized from 10.09 head. The prices resilized from 10.

TWAS EVER THUS.

I never reared a young gazelle, (Broanse, you ree, I never tried,)
But, had it known and loved me well,
No doubt the creature would have died.
My rich and aged Uncle John

Has known me long and loves me well, But still persiate in living on— I would be were a young geselle!

I never loved a tree or flower; But if I had, I beg to say,

The blight, the wind, the sun, or shower,
Would scon have withered it away.

I've dearly loved my Ucele John,
From oblidheed to the present hour,
And yet he will go living on—
I would he were a tree or flower.

A Wisconsin farmer says his farm is too nall to stack his crops

R. R. R. -RADWAY'S READY RELIEF .- To be ments and diseases prescribed, is what the Rugger guarantees, to perform. Its motto is plain and sys-tematic: It will surely cure! There is no other remedy, no other LINIMANT, no kind of PAIN-KIL-LEE, that will check pain so suddenly and so mile-factory as Ranway's READY RELIEF. It has been thoroughly tested in the workshop and in the field, in the counting room and at the forge, among civilians and soldiers, in the parior and in the hospital, throughout all the varied climes of the earth, and one general verdict has come home: " The moment Radway's Ready Relief is applied externally, or taken inwardly according to directions, PAIN, from kind for SPRAINS, or BURNS, or SCALDS, or CUTS, CRAMPS, BRUISES, OF STRAIMS. It is excellent for CHILBLAINS, MOSQUITO BITES, also STINGS OF POI-DNOVS INSECTS. It is unparalished for Sun Strokes, APOPLEXY, RHEEWATISM. TOOTWACHE, Tie DoLOU. RECE, INPLANMATION OF THE STOMACH, BOWELS, KIDNETS, &c. Good for almost everything. No family should be without it. Follow directions and speedy cure will be effected. Sold by Druggists. Price 50 cents per bettle.

Holloway's Distaint, unlike the remedicathat live but for a day, has now been before the public for over a quarter of a century, effecting cure in the most hopeless cases of old serse, cancers and ulcers. Manufactery, 90 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

WHEN YOU FREL A COURS OF brenchial affection creeping on the lungs, take AVER'S CHERRY PECFORAL, and care it before it becomes incu-rable. sap7.31

Marriages.

Marriage notices must always be accompanied by a responsible name.

On the 22d of Aug., by the Rev. A. Manship, Mr. William J. Tersma to Miss Mary E. Zirolum, daughter of J. Q. A. Ziegler, U. S. M., both of this city.
On the 22d of Aug., by the Rev. T. A. Ferniey, Mr. Harramin F. Lovins of Boston, Mass., to Miss Massir Martin, of Wilmington, Ect.
On the 17th of July, by the Rev. A. Atwood, Mr. Uziah Heatment o Miss Annie M. Ecclestop, both of this city.
On the 26th of Aug., by the Rev. M. D. Kuttz, Mr. Harry F. Alleiber to Miss Mary V. Jones, both of this city.

a the 20th of April, by the Rev. G. Oram, Mr. also W. Wilson to Miss Marcaner F. Cross.

Chairs W. Wilson to missioned both of this city.
On the 24th of Aug., by the Rev. Jos. D. Nawlin, Richard Kaser, Esq., of Bailimore, Md., to Mrs. Janessa, M. Mirchard, daughter of the late Wm. B. Callicot, Esq., of this city.

BEATHS.

IT Notices of Deaths must always be accompa-ated by a responsible same.

On the 26th of Aug., WILLIAM HARROD, in his On the 26th of Aug., John Elkinton, in his 42d.

On the 26th of Aug., THOMAS ROWLAND, in his 7th year. On the 25th of Aug., Manuel B. Wear, of Moorestown, N. J., In his 4rd year.
On the 25th of Aug., Mrs. Many. Asm., wife of Thos. W. Clinton to her 55th year.
On the 25th of Aug., Saram A. Gaiser, in her 5th year.
On the 25th of Aug., Mrs. Saram A. Gaiseriens, in her 65th year.

On the 24th of Aug , Jacon Connas, in his 56th year. On the 23d of Aug., Joun H. Jackson, in his 37th an teach you—each according to his experience; but, if you only want to indulge a vain curiosity, into that no honest teacher who deals in the ruth will be able to satisfy you."

POST-MORTEM PRAISE.

"Do you remember Drover?" said Shag to its friend Tray.

"What, the shepherd dog on the hill?" asked fray.

"Ay; a rough, slouchy looking fellow: half unt and half dirt color," said Shag.

"Ay; a rough, slouchy looking fellow: half unt and half dirt color," said Shag.

"Oh, yes," said Tray; "I remember him very rell—elow and eleepy, rather. They said he

THE MARKETS.

PLOUR—The market has been more active Sales of 3000 bits at $7.85 for auperfine; $2.60 bits of results at $2.60 bits of range transitis and $2.60 bits of range years.

Gray.

"Ay; a rough, slouchy looking fellow: half unt and half dirt color," said Shag.

"Oh, yes," said Tray; "I remember him very rell—elow and eleepy, rather. They said he

Tray.

"Ay; a rough, slouchy looking fellow: half rust and half dirt color," said Shag.

"Oh, yee," said Tray; "I remember him very well—slow and sloepy, rather. They said he liked eating and sloepy rather. They said he liked eating and sloepy rather. They said he liked eating and sloepy how would say; "to be sare they did," said Shag; "to hear their talk about him, you would say in the dead, then?" inquired Tray.

"He is," said Shag; "and, to hear the fuses they are making about him, you would say the world must stand still without him—such a heattly he was—so faithful, so clever, so thereof; in short, I doubt if such a paragon of perfection, in the shape of a dog, ever existed before, or ever will appear again."

"You don't say so!" said Tray.

"I do; and what do you think? they're going to have him stuffed; they are, truly!" said Shag.

"Never!" said Tray. "How long have they found all this out about him?"

"Oh, only since he died," said Shag.

"That's the way with 'cm," said Tray: "he got many a hard word and sharp kick, while he was alive, that he diin't deserve, and now he is dead they make all this ado about him with about as little reason."

"We Guizot has just completed his eightieth year. On that occasion he wrote to his friend Viennet, the great writer of fables and the Nestor of the Frerch Academy, saying. "Tell we how if must live to get up to minety?" Viennet replied: "Write fabre." An academic Phill Additional the problem of the surface of the selling at from 30 or fee. The supply of Heef Pattle during the pattlers.

Phill Additional and the low selling at from all sizes of the selling at from all sizes of the sizes of the selling at from all sizes of the sizes of the selling at form all sizes of the sizes of the sizes of th

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

Unequalled Inducements.

Beautiful Premium Engraving.

The proprietors of the "eldert and hest of the week the "offer unequalted inducements to those who is entitles" offer unequalted inducements to those who is not those who remit, as single subsections, the full subsections

A large and beautiful steel line engraving, 96 inches long by St taches wide, possessing all the softs; possible charm of Measurist, called will be and grant to every single ($2.50) subscriber, and to every person sanding on a ciul. The great of peace of this Premium will, we brust, be compounded a large recrease of our subscription liet.

"One of Life's Happy Hours,"

The soutents of THE Post shall consist, as herete hre, of the very heat original and selected master that

STORIES, SKETCHES, ESSAYS, ANECDOTES, AGRICULTURAL ARTICLES, RECKIPTS, NEWS, LETTERS, from the best ive and foreign sources, &c., &c., &c.,

NEUTRAL IN POLITICS.

The Post is exclusively devoted to Literature, and therefore dose not discuss political or sectarian questions. It is a sommon ground, where all can meet in harmony, without regard fortheir views upon the polition or sectorial questions of the day

TERMS.

Our terms are the same as those of that well-known magnaine, The Lauv's Friend-in order that the class may be made up of the paper and magnaine sen-jointly when so desired and are as follows:

One copy (with the large Premium Engraving) $2.50 1 copy of The Post and 1 of The Lady's Friend and one engraving.

BUR REWING MACRINE PREMIUM.

We still sontinue our offer of a Wheeler & Wilson's Sewing Machine, such as Wheeler & Wilson sell for $55 00, to any one sending on a list of $ subservisors at $2.50 each. We will also send this Ma serihers at $2.50 each. We will also send this Ma-china on the old terms of twenty subscribers and sixty dotters (that is, ten deliars an addition to the amount of the subscription price) if desired. And we will send any of the higher priced Wheeler & Wilson's Ma-chines, if the difference to price is also remitted. Every subscriber on the above Fremium hats will re-serve, in addition to his magazine or paper, a copy of the large Premium engraving, "One of Life's Happy Hours." The regular olub subscribers do not reserve this engraving, unless they remit one dollar extra for it. Tun Parane on Maganinus will be sent to differen

Manivyaness. - In remitting, name at the top of you letter, your post office, county, and state. If possible, procurs a post office order on Philadelphia. If a post office order cannot be had, get a draft on Philadelphia or New York, payaffe to one order. I a draft cannot ad, send United States notes. Do not send mone the Express Companies, unless you pay the ges. Address. oh arg on

HENRY PETERSON & CO., No. 819 Walnut Street, Philadelphia.

I P Spectmen copies will be sent postpaid on the mpt of Ann cents

SEASIDE SONG.

Bing now upon the ellent shore The saddest of the songs, O Sea! And send its dirge like melody O'er thy dark waves to me

I gave a richly-freighted bark To sail with then at golden morn, And now on thy white created waves To me the wreck is borne.

From created waves! will ve not bear Me on to some remoter strans, Where now, perchance, my gold and gems Lie scattered on the sand?

"O, never more," thy surges say, Breaking along the sullen shore

Twas love and hope we bore from thee,

Daniel and Ezckiel Webster.

Boscawen farmer came many years ago the office of the Statesman and illustrated the difference between the economic habits of the brothers Webster in the following way:his office door, would say to a laboring man. Mr. Jones, there is a cord of wood, to be sawed twice, split, and carried up stairs. What will you do it for?" One doller, replies Jones.
But, my dear man, you can complete the job
by the middle of the afternoon, and you do not pretend to ask more than a dollar a day. Come say seventy five cents, and the money is yours.

Jones yields and does the work.
" Daniel," he continued, " having a cord of wood to be served in the same way, calls the first man who comes along, and says, 'I wish you would properly prepare the wood for my stove, and take it up stairs.' When the work is done, the laborer is asked what is to pay, and save 'Ope dollar, sir.' 'One dollar !' says Mr why, man, you can't afford to work so cheap as that; here is a dollar and a half, and call again when you see wood at my office door. "-N. H. Statesman.

To visw the Paris exhibition, according to an English writer's calculation, it is necessary to devote on an average five minutes to the glass case of each exhibitor. These number, it is each exhibitor. These number, 1 minutes, making $,750 hours, or 156 days 6 hours; that is 8 months, 6 days, and 6 hours, reckoning 24 hours for each day. But as the interior of the piace can only be visited from 10 morning till six in the evening. there are only eight hours at the visitor's disposal instead of 24. One would therefore be occu-pied in the inspection 15 months, 20 days, 2

LET A few days ago a man got out of the care at Peoria, Ill., with a large bag in his hand, which he carried very carefully. After walking up the street a short distance he put his bag down, untied it and lifted out a good staed boy. He had brought him several miles as baggage brought him several m and without having him obecked.

An editor, puffing air-tight coffins, says: "No person having once tried one of these cof-fins will ever use any other." BUNBET.

I watched the summer night come down, With silent step o'er hill and lea; The sunset clouds were all aflame,

And all affame the roey sea! I said, to simply live seems joy,
To breathe this balmy air is bliss, would that when I come to die, It might be such a night as this.

With heaven seemingly so near, So filled with golden, glowing light, The air above so fresh and clear, The ground with countless roses bright: Methicks that I could yield my breath

Without a fear, without a sigh, Could the last scene mine eyes beheld, Be such a world and such a sky!

But even as I spoke, the sun Had called his fleeting glory in; A sullen storm with angry brow, Came up where all the light had been;

A mouning wind came off the sea, Would fill a sinking heart with dread; The night was dark with coming rain, A raven dapped his wings o'erhead !

Ah me, I sighed, 'tie ever thus, The night will still obscure the day; The fairest things the earth can bring E'en while we gaze will fade away; Each fleeting hour its secret brings, No mortal hand may hold the key; The world is full of wondrous things, And life like death is mystery.

INDIOS BRAVOS.

"The Artec children?" said Vansten on night. "Why see here, sir," laying his freshly-shaped plug impressively on my arm: "I guess I had acquaintance with that 'do' from its first hatch to the full fledging, when it soared up the empyrean, and alighted in the high-class palaces of England. The durned little Sambos! They were born, sir, at Decora, in San Salvador. I knew old Burgos, their father, an' Christina, their mother, an' I'd have been acquainted with their grand parents, if they'd had any in par tic'ar. The children were just common Sambos an' if scientific folk knew their business, they'd than an almighty pile of sim'lar vermin there-abouts. A Spaniard got 'em first, but he lost heart, an' soid 'em to the Down-Kaster for one hundred dollars apiece. They said down to Chagres as it were dear flesh; but Yankee smartness hadn't been rightly measured then Why, I hear the pair is going to be married! It's high prime joking, that is!"
"That's so," said Frazer, thoughtfully—

"that's all so; but the Itzimaya-it may be fact for all that. Tell yer what it is, boys," raising for all that. Tell yer what it is, boys," raising his head; "this age is getting that dang'rously keen an' olever, it'll lose all its little wits soon Now, I'd like to hear-it's what I never heard why the essentific folk who've backed their own nonsense with all they could pick up of other people's, should deny the Itzimaya? Do they, or does any man, know aught of that country beyond the fancy-lines they put in maps to prettify them up? Has any one of them been up the Usumacinta or the Lacaudon? What liv-ing being has come back from westwards of Peten? We here, at this moment, are camped upon a stream that no man has ascended, and we have before us a two-hundred league stretch which Nicaragus has never explored, an' no white mortal has traversed. Guatemala is full of savage districts that the conquisadores didn't enter, an' the Greasers daren't approach. Costa Rica ha'n't the spunk to use its own Atlantic shore, for fear of Guatusos an' Talamancas. What, in thunder, do these little frog-backed, ratan legged, rabbit-faced professor's mean by preaching to us—us who've made our larning with eyes an' skin? If I say there's the Eldo-rado within fifty miles of the Howard House in Aspinwall—ay, right 'twixt Aspinwall an' Pa-nama, within ten miles of their ecientific railway -dare any man go to see? It makes me right down mad sometimes to hear folks gas! You may take my word for it, sir, an' I don't mostly talk of things I don't know somewhat aboutthere's room for ten Itsimayas in the unexplored parts of Guatemala alone. Mind yer, I don't say there's a single one, but I'll be right happy to volunteer with you if you'll make a party to look for it—I'll say that."

" If the Mayas caught you, they'd skin that carcase of yours quick time," said Vaneten. Wall, if they take off my skin, they won't find much to eat," replied Frazer, stretching his sinewy arm. "I'd advance science muchly out there, I guess, with this superior preparation of

By the way," I said to Beasley, " you fell in with the Guatusos once, didn't you? Frazer spoke of it the other night."
"I did so! Likewise fell out with one of Likewise fell out with one of 'em, kerslash, sharp as a Yankee girl with toothache. Now, look ye here, Double Dutch! I'm bound to shoot when riled, an' that's not considered friendly in a general way; so don't you put in any of your durned pepper-sauce, because this story allurs roughs my skin.

Frezer told you all about Santa Rees, an how we split up after that awakening. I cot-toned to four others, all good men, an' we made a merry track for the San Carlos, which was reached safe enough; but nery speckle of gold did we find on the way. The night before starting down, I said: 'Hee here how this is, boye! I'm not going back to Walker with neither scalps nor plunder-not for shame's cake! There's gold here somewheres, an' I'm sound to have my lot in this universe wherever Now, I sak no man to there's lot to be had. follow-we're a'l free Rangers, I take it to-morrow morning I shall start for the Rio Frio; an' them who don't notion that voyage, can go down the San Carles, an' I hope they'll arrive safe to pray for me—'"

map. Let's see exactly where we are."
"I learned my geography moetly on my two . The author frels that he should give his author! Costa Rican peons, who crossed the Frie country in descring from Coionel Carty in Castillo Viejo, secondly by the report of the commandant of San Carlos, who, in 1948 made a most disastrous expedien against these Indians. Tairdiy, by the report given by the survivors of a "prospecting" party, who marched from the Costa Rican side in 1880. Fourthly from the report of Captain Party of Greytteen, who ascended the Frie River in 1881 accompaned by three Frenchmen. In San Jose de Costa Rica and ta Greytown, the author has seen some first threat distributions of sold broader.

Going up that stream from the Atlantic, the first fair sized river one comes across on the Costa Rican bank is the Screbpiqui here; forty miles above that is the San Carlos, an' there isn't another as far as the lake, you see. But opposite Fort Ban Carlos here—nothing to do with the river of like name, mind yer—about three hundred yards from the spot where the big San Juan flows out of the lake, is marked the mouth of a large river called the Frio, flowing sets it. You'll note that the genius who made this may—an' he did make it too, every bit of it—has given the full windings of the Frio, marked the mountains an' all other pretty things, but over the whole is scored 'utterly unexplored,' which is nigh the only truth in his pictur'. All the land from the Merivalles Mounpicture. All the land from the merivalies made re-tains to the San Carlos, ay, an' as fur as Grey-town on the other bank, they say, is inhabited by a drive of 'Indios bravos,' called 'Guatusos' by the Gressors, an' 'Prancos' by the Kingmen. To one knows aught about them, for they're quiet enough if left alone; but there they squat half across the continent, free as Irishmen as election-time, blocking the Atlantic coast and the San Juan, an' playing etarnal destiny with all the parties that have been sent aginet them Now you see how the land lay to us from the

But why do you notion there's diggins on the F.io, Pike?" asked Vansten.

"Wal, I've not studied muchly, yer see, through being born strong an' clever, but I hear tell that the Conquisadores found the bullion here in piles like nat'ral elevations. The Ind'ans ate an' drank as' slept on gold an' jewels likewise, an' I want to know where that metal came Not from Chontales for there's m washings there, at least not known, an' nary washings there, at least not known, an hary sign of Ind'an mining; not from Segovia—for those diggings searcely pay for wasted water; not from any part of Nicaragua; nor, I'll mostly take oath, from Mosquito: so where did it come from? Can you tell me that, boy? I say it came from the Frio, an' that I'll kinder prove.

came from the Frio, an' that I'll known prove.

"We had a long talk that night, quite friendly, but three of the party would not take the woods. Segur jumped up when first I spoke, eaying: 'I'm with yer, Jem, to make a pile or lose a scalp!' Next day, the other three—good men they was—started down the river on a fittle raft, after giving us all their spars cartridges. ittle raft, after giving us all their spare cartridge an' a machete. We watched them round the reach, an' then tracked off to the north-weet.

"The woods was tall an' close, as if they'd not been fired since Ind'an times, but the eur glinted through the tree-tops with that bright glare only seen in the lake forcets. There is a greenish sort of twilight under shadow of the trees in some parts, but round the Lake of Nicaragua the air is allure white an' glistering. Eh, sir! what can home staying folk know of real excitement? Some there is among them who lose breath at sight of a stinking newspaper: others get powerful nervous on catching a glimpse of white shoulders an' scented frocks; but the blood of a true man rises hottest an quickest in the darwing shade of an Ind'an wood, where, as he knows well, every bush may hold an enemy, where, from minute to minute, the yellow skin an' shining eyes of a savage may rise suddentintly to his sight in the bright silent sunlight. Night brit gs no stupid lethargy to him. In the white moonbeams or the ebony shadow, his enemy must be watched, for the game has life for its stake, an' allurs, allurs the hances of the cards are agin the civilized man! Mind yer, I don't say as the excitement sin't

" But Segur was as good a friend as could be hearty as a juguar, an' equare all ways like a yard o' wall. We travelled warily for three days, an' then a little creek was cross we washed the mud; there was gold at botton of the cup as much as would cover a dime. never seen such prospecting as that, barring one or two claims at old Washo. We stayed there four days to make tasajo from the firsh of a cimaron I shot, an' then pressed on agin, skeary that the Prangue should see our smoke an' sign At that creek, I mind seeing a fight between a black snake an' a rattler which were pretty to intelligent bystanders.

"Fust day after leaving that prospect, we erossed a track shod, but with toes inturned like Ind'an. Can you tell me, eir, why all savages turn their feet inwards, while we turn 'em out? They do it, every race of 'em, but the Lord alone knows why; unless it's been revealed to some of yer scientifies who travel the world round in a back-parlor, an' foot out the universe from their sign of Ind'an, nor meeting any danger to speak of, though tigers, damars, an' pumas seemed thick there as Turkey buzzards round a sloughter yard. We was getting to feel quite a confidence in the instituotions of the land, when, one afternoon, Segur caught my arm suddintly, an' dropped. So did I, o' course. Then voices reached our cars, sounding closer an' closer, an' then dying away. After a quarter of an hour, when all was still, we rose up. Fifty yards further was an Ind'an road, not unlike them tracks cut by tlack ante, but multiplied by human natur It was deep cut in the earth, three or four feet maybe, an' all the tracks in it were shod; not even a child's naked foot among 'em, nor sign of any dog, which made us cock our hats, guess, an' think small things of Providence guess, an' think small things of Frovincence We jumped across, an' on the other side S gur said to me: 'lt's getting warm, Jem's way does that road lead, d'ye notion?' wards one of the rabbit-warrens on the Frie. I should guess. Shall we go for to see how things air done in them recluded grots, Jem?' 'Why,' I said, after thinking matters over, 'it won't be aren't likely to travel at night; no forest Ind'ans we safe to pray for me—'"

"Wait a moment," I interrupted. "Here'e a p. Let's see exactly where we are."

I learned my geography mostly on my two

The artiful field the characteristic field in the control of the cont bushes, an' I took water for the first three hours. Several parties passed along as could be heerd, but we were safer there than we'd ha' tramp along the shadowed side, with eyes an' ears skinned, I tell yer. Just at dawn, we came to a town or village, an'scrambled into the bush two, who accorded the Frie River in isst account paned by three Frenchmen. In San Jose de Costa Rica and in Greytown, the author has seen some most extraordisary specimens of gold brought by these parties from the Guatuse country. The description of the Indian sarred places is singularly suggestive of those in Chentales, now ruinous.

legs," said Beasley. "but it's mighty easy to understand this. Here's the broad San Juan far off that I can't say much of the town, more running from the Lake of Nicaragua to Greytown. Going up that stream from the Atlantic, an' over that was tall thatched roofs an' palmtrees, an' standard poles. On t'other side we strove to hit the road, but couldn't find a track. But a creek was struck, an' there agin we 'found ile,' but not so free as before. Up the bank we went along some way, until reaching a lot of plantain patches an' thatch-built huts, which, I guess, were the town farms, but only used when the fruit-crop was gathered, for, though we didn't go near them, there was no 'sign' about. Next night, we struck another road, an' travelling over it, was mighty nearly caught by a late Ind'an. I was just sniggering at some joke of Segur's, when voices was heerd in front. To get out was impossible, for is chanced that the wood was thin there, an' our figures must have been seen on the ridge, so we dropped along the black shadow, squeezing to the bank. They came on, two men, talking loud, an', as it seemed to us, drunk. One of 'em stumbled over my head giving me a kick like a horse, but the other laughed; an' they passed on, poor cusses, never knowing how near they'd been to their last kick in this world's shoes. Better watch was kept after that

"So things went for a tertnight. We used the road as far as was safe, an' passed one or two towns much like the first, so far as could be seen. One morning—I mind that day well we was tramping along wearily enough, for our belts was heavy with gold; said Segur to me: 'We must be nigh the Frio, hoss! There's big we must be nigh the Frio, hoss! There's big travel over them superfine roads, an' the Gold River can't be far away, I take it. He'd cearce finished, when he shot slash into the water, right overhead; an' when I fished him out, an' prospected through the bushes, we found our-selves on the bank of a slow moddy stream, some sixty yards across. 'That's the Frio,' said I; 'did you find it cold, old man?' An' then we went to sleep, cheerier than since leaving the we went to aleep, cheerier than since leaving the San Carlos.

"That afternoon, we prospected all round, an' found the dust in bucketfuls. 'If this goes on so,' says Segur, 'we'll need a contract and a bell-cart to carry the plunder.' Every cup gave big pay, an' in twenty-four hours we'd a'most more than could be stowed. Our buttons bust on by one, we were that proud. But at dawn, in by one, we were that proud. It at dawn, in rounding a little bend, we came suddiatly upon an Ind'an fishing. A fine tall fellow he were; six feet high, light odored, an' handsome, with a head of long black hair, that hung down his back like a horse-tail. Comanche chief, by Thunder!' muttered Seguar; an' he did look just that. He stood upon a little raft, stark naked, with a tiger's skin between his feet.

"Before we'd got over the start, the Ind'an dropped his spear, an' snatched a bow from the raft, pointing a five foot arrow at me. Segur dropped him slick, an' he fell into the water. "But we were badly seared. I've seen many a 'buck,' an' I've fought free over most prairse, but such pluck as that Gustuso's I never see. 'It's time to truck out, hose, with the plunder,' said Segur. 'They call this a "Cold River," but it's too hot for our constitution. Guess we'll make that dug-out now, quick time.' we'll make that dug-out now, quick time.' So we found a like'y tree, dropped it, an' set it aburaing, an' meantime washed gold. At the end of a fortnight, we launched the craft, an' drifted down stream. Queer things I saw on that v'yage, though it was but seven days long. The banks were thick with plantains, an' here and there was a little but, built of three poles, like a dealerner, trades. like a dog-kennel. There was deep ent roade, too, that opened on the river, an' at every such wharf, if one may call 'em so, a ferry-caft was moored. Maybe you've seen a Guatuso boat, sir; they find 'em on the lake sometimes, an' floating down the San Juan. It is a raft made of two boughs tied fast together with ratans, an about twenty eight inches square. The Guatuso stands upright upon it, an' steers about with s long paddle-at hast I reckon sc. Those we long padole—at least I reckon ec. Those we saw on the Frio were handsome little craft, carved an' painted all over, with a crutch at each corner, ornamented with pretty shells. We stole one, but some Greaser cuss toted it off at San Carlos poled by night down the stream, be tween banks low an' swampy, that a'most gave one fever to look at: the Indans all live inland on that account, I guess. But next night, the ground began to rice, an' we rested for the day beneath a low hill covered with gray trees, that dusk, we got underway agin, an' just as the full moon rose, passed through a sort of gorge. I was peering into the black water forward. my eyes just about skinned to see the enage, when Segur suddintly whispered: 'Great Heaven, Jam. look here! I turned saide. passing a break in the canyon, where the hills emoothed down into a little prairs of three or four scree maybe. Two lines o' ficaras" green threw it, forming a cross in the middle; but all other trees had been out down on the hills. on the grown of the hills an' down the sides were great piles an' equares of stone, an' over them were long lines of statues-hundreds an thousands-ehining like white marble in the the prairs, were two small persmids of adobe on either side of the jioara line, an' about them was dozen tall stone figures on pedestals-com equatted on hands an' knees, others crouched with heads between their shoulders like tigers, others had great mouths that seemed to gap for blood-like living devils. For we saw in a moment what this was—the burying-place of the Guatuso chiefs, an' their big temple.

"We caught hold of the branches by the night as has been given to few men to beholdthose mysterious piaces where Ind'ans still wor-ship their devilish old gods. An' a grand sight it were—a grand sight, sir! Under the hillshadows were teocallis, taller an' broader than in the centre, an' at the furthest side was a big building, low an' black. There was banned waving on tall staves, an' ribbons an' colo cloths on the junta-trees, that fluttered gently in the night-wind. Other things, too, was there on the trees—shapeless lumps sied to the branches, an' round white balls that gistened brighter than ivory. Essy we guessed what those were, for a faint an' sickly smell came in breaths across the water. The Ind'an religion was taught them by devile, the padres say, and, true been further off, always barring dogs. Towards it is, they ought to recognize all such handiwork. two o'clock, I woke Segur, an' lay down till dusk; an' then we jumped into the road to tramp along the shadowed side, with eyes an' tramp along the shadowed side, with eyes an' beaten in the temple, an' the war-whistles care skinned I tell yes. Just at dawn we came acreamed out. That woke us up, an' we dropped down-stream under the shadow of the trees. Bix days later, Ean Carlos was reached: we divided the plunder, an' I returned to the States for a spree while the dollars lasted. Segur went to Healeja, an' thence to San Francisco, where he's done wall, I hear—a good fellow he was.

*The jurare, or wild calabash-tree, is still reve renced by the Christian Indians of Central America

"An' that's all I can tell you of the Guatage, boys, for I never saw but one, an' he weren's white at all. There's a fortune waiting in that white at all. There's a fortune waiting in that land for the men as has spunk to go seek it, an' maybe we'll shake a cradle there yet, air, in spite of Gresser governments. The golfired foois! Neither Nicaragua nor Costa Rios dare go near the river, an' yet they're just gay to fight for its possession. Only you call agin for volunteers in Greytown, sir, an' never sweat for one government or other; we'll put the matter through!" through !"

JULY.

The stately foxglove has purpled and died Many a time since the golden day, When at the feet of my new won bride I watched her dreaming the world away; Her maiden world, so narrow, so sweet, With beavenly music for its air, And paths pressed only by angel feet— A world underkened by evil or care.

The tender daylight caressed her face, Her clear eyes blended with heaven's soft blue,

The grace of her form was the harebell's grace, And her lovely lips bore the wild pink's hue; bout her all fair, unsulfied things, Light, and earth's flowers and bounteous

green
Gathered—mild spirits with soundless wings—
Like handmaids tending a maiden queen.

l'oloes were near us, but we were alone; She was alone in her maiden mood-A mood that even love's gentlest tone
Might break upon with a sound too rude,
Light on her hand lay the touch of mine, As shadow on flower or leaf might lie; Low beat my heart in the silence fine Of her dreaming thoughts' sweet mystery.

The wild rose many a time has died Since at the feet of my love I lay,
In the golden full of life's summer-tide,
Watching her dreaming the world away;
To thrill with joy when she woke at last
And bent upon me the trustful gass
That wistfully never has turned to the past,
Or paid in doubt of the compine days.

Or paled in doubt of the coming days. DAME CATHERINE'S WISHES.

There was once a mother and son, who lived together in a pretty cottage beside a river. Dame Catherine had been a widow so long that her boy had but a faint recollection of his father. They were very poor people, and yet between the garden, the dame's spinning-wheel, and her son's work among the farms around, they had always just enough. Dame Catherine had been bought up in a very different condition of life, and as she had imparted all her knowledge to her son, he was far superior in mind a ners to most of the village youths, and his mo-ther often regretted that his prospects were so narrow and humble. "If only he could get out into the world, I am certain he would prosper she constantly sighed, as she whirred her wheel, and warched for his return along the walk by the river.

But dream and wish as she might, work must go on; and one evening she spun so attentively, that she noticed no advancing step until the shadow of a plumed hat fell on the threshold, and a silvery young voice asked, if a gentleman who was very weary could be kindly

The widow sprang up, drew forward a brown chair, and threw a little cushion across it, and, in a second, a tall, elderly man entered, leaning on the shoulder of his daughter, a fair maiden of seventeen, who presently took a seat among the flower-pots on the window-sill.

The complement served were fairured but after

The gentleman seemed very fatigued, but after be refreshment of a rest, he began to look al him, and admire the prospect of the sunny river, with its rising, richly-wooded banks.

"There is nothing like this in the city," said he; "and it seems like a vision of paradise." The widow did not heed how thin and wan he looked, nor did she notice his words, except to mark that he came from the town for which she was always longing, and she almost started when he added, acted,

'You must be very happy here."
'I don't know," she said. "Perhaps I might be, for my own part, but for Richara's sake I wish I was elsewhere."
"Is that your son?" asked the gentleman.

"Yes, truly," said the widow, "and it grieves my heart to see him working in the fields through sun and shower, with no companions but coarse the stranger, with a dim look of recognition in his eyes. "Certainly not," she answered. "In my husband's time we lived in the Clock House of Avondale town."

"Then you are the widow of my oldest friend," exclaimed the invalid, rising. "You must have often heard your husband speak of young John Herman, who went to Flanders—yee; and you saw me once, twenty years ago Well, here I saw me once, twenty years ago Well, am, old Councillor Herman, of Avondale

And then the young lady came softly forward to salute the relict of her father's old companion, and her soft brocade rustled against the widow's scanty serge, and her white, smooth fingers touched the other's brown toil-worn hand, and made it look darker and re

"Richard must go back with us to Avondale," said the gentleman. "His father's sen must not live among boors any longer. What! is this he?" for the young man entered at that moment, said the gentleman. and for some minutes could scarcely understand the rapid tale which his mother unfolded; but when he comprehended, his eyes flashed, and his form dilated, and Juliet Herman, the mer-chant's daughter, thought to herself that he would certainly become a very fine young man, if he once associated with smarter people than his dingy mother, in her woollen gown

The shadows of evening had fallen, and the stars were reflicted in the waters, ere conducted the Conneillor and his daughter back ble dappled steeds! truly a fine carriage, with no and Richard ingered to watch them drive away, and mused on ponsiless youths, who had mar-ried their master's daughters, and inherited their master's wealth, for it was arranged that Richard master's wealth, for it was arranged that Richard should go to Avondale on that day week, and abide there, working in the Councillor's warehouse, and lodging in the town.

The widow found plenty to do in that week. She had a little hoard—a very little one. Had it been as many pounds as it was shillings, it would still have been but small. She kept it in a china teapot, on the top shelf of the cupboard, along with some darned laces, and sundry other relics of her "better days," laid up in lavender. She got down the china teapot, and when she put it up again it was empty—it took every put it up again it was empty—it took every penny to get her boy a single suit fit for city society. She wished the Coure'llor had helped little in this matter. Perhaps he would, if he d thought of it; but he was so very rich that had thought of it; but he was so very rich that he did not know how poor is poverty. When Sunday evening came, and Dame Cathe-rine and her son sat at their open door, over-looking the river, she had time to realize the change. Next Sunday she must sit there Never mind, Richard would not be solitary, for Councillor Herman would not withhold bis hospitality from his old friend's son. She could bear anything for Richard's good; and surely, some day, in a stately city mansion, she herself would sit in the place of honor—the nother of a worthy merchant prince. Certainly her wildest wishes were coming true. So Richard went away, and his mother stayed at home, and worked as hard as ever, and was quite content. Still, when Christmas came, it was a little bitter to find her boy could not come to her, because he was invited to a grand party at the Councillor's, and feared to give offence if he absented himself.

'No, that would never do," she reasoned "but the Councillor needn't have asked him. He might have thought of me, all by myself. If there's to be a party, one more or less can't

Time passed swiftly on. Richard came once or twies to the old house; but Christmas after Christmas his mother sat alone. She kept up her spirits, however, for her boy was prospering wonderfully, and once in the summer-time he brought Juliet Herman to visit her, and the young lady behaved most prettily, and presisted in gathering water creases for tea with her own hands, and otherwise displaying an agreeable condescension; but the Christmas after that, the widow was thrown into a state of frightened elation, by an invitation to spend the festival, with other guests, at the Councille Her son also sent a parcel of handsome garments for her use during the visit.

On the morning of her journey to Avondale, Dame Catherine surveyed herself in her cracked mirror, and thought her appearance imposing and perfect. On the evening of her arrival there, she ruefully glanced at the cheval glass in her chamber, and believed nerself a gay, Wby, the housekeeper was a duchess compared with her, and she was overswed by the very her chamber, and believed herself a guy. which nor, and sole was overswest by the rest chairs and tables, they were all so gilt and grand. Even her own fine dress prevented her feeling at ease. Oh! how often she wished herself in her brown woollen gown, sitting at the spinn wheel, looking down upon the river! And yet Richard scemed quite at home. Well he might, for he was going to marry the daughter of the house. And she thought he did not altogether care for her presence. Ah, well, she was in her place in the sanded kitchen: he was more fit for the gay saloon. It was ear to hear for his

So, when Richard married Juliet Herman, in Avondale Abbey, his mother was not there; but at the wedding hour, an old gray woman might be seen going down the walk beside the river towards a little boary church, which stood al-ways open that passers-by might enter and pray. She went in, and sat down on a step in the provision for her, that was all. She seldom saw him, she never saw his children after they were just old enough to lisp "grandmother." Juliet did not wish them to grow familiar with such a homely place as that wooden cottage. But the widow was satisfied to endure snything for

But was it for his good? The question some times forced itself on her mind. He was still a young man, and yet he grew grey and wrinkled. She heard rumors of Juliet's brilliance and gayeties, but not from him, for he rarely named his wife. And at last he died suddenly; so sud-denly that there was no last word for his lonely

She remains still in the but beside the river a very aged woman, and all her wishe have faded into one regret-that she was not more contented long, long ago, when a bright youth sat by her spinning-wheel, and -watched the sun set over the meadow beyond the wil-She is quite blind now, and cannot that the wheel is covered with dust; so she folds her thin hands meekly, and says, "God's will be done, only I wish I had not wished!"

Literary Poverty.

The all-night walks of Dr. Johnson and Richard Savage in the streets of London from want of a place to lav their heads, find not un-frequent parallels in New York. There are hundreds of men of good literary abilities, who are often pressed for the means of getting a supper and a bed in this city. It is well known that men of the most creditable rebulsatic attain-ments—men who know Greek, Latin and other tongues beside their mother tongue-may b ad in this city who are glad of an oppo nity to write advertisements for patent medicin proprietors and shopkeepers. The men who make literature "pay" are the rare exception One of the most prosperous writers now on the New York press was three years ago so up" that he went without food for fert hours, too proud to ask for help, and too empty-pocketed to have the means for purchasing a meal. This is not fiction but fact. During the present year this gentleman has helped a score of poor people in distress from his full pockets

New York Gazette.

GENTLEMEN'S RINGS .- A new form has been given to gentlemen's rings. The stones are now cut very long and narrow, and the bands across which they are laid frequently composed of three or four fine chains. The favorice stone for a "gift" ring to a gentleman is the "Amazon." It is believed by the Japanese to possess the power of perpetuating affection.

Temple, and miserably failed.

MY MOTHER'S WHEEL.

In the shadows creeping o'er Narrow pane and attic floor, Stands a wheel with mould'ring band, Turned no more by foot or hand; Dust upon it deeply lies, Tiny specks that cloud the eyes; Over it the spiders spin Daylight out and evening in.

As I sit beside it now, Weary heart and sching brow, Years go backward as the tide From the silver seasons glide.

Life again is passing fair,

Sunshine glints my face and hair,

And a simple child I kneel,

Happy by this little wheel.

Once again I hear its hum, While the moments go and come; See the tireless fingers hold Finest threads like shining gold; Busy till the sunset red, Till the last faint beam is fied; Spinning all the live-long day, Hours of pain and joy away.

Faithful hands that tolled so long, Lips that sung my cradle song, Come and hush my sighs once more, Lighten burdens as before! Softly through this allent room Floats a brightness through the gloom, While her presence seems to steal Back to me beside this wheel.

LORD ULSWATER.

(CONCLUDED.)

CHAPTER LXL.

THE PASSENGER OUTWARD BOURD.

"For San Francisco direct, the splendid, fast sailing, British-built clipper-ship Golden Gate, A No. 1 at Lloyd's; George Hopkins, com-A No. 1 at Lloyd's; George Hopkins, com-mander. Carries a surgeon. To sail from Liver-pool; and has excellent accommodation in chiefcabin, second-cabin, and steerage. For freight or passage apply," &c. This advertisement had in London and Liverpool pe been conspicuous in London and Liverpool pa pers for some time past; and now the great three-master, with her tall spars and fine lines was clear of the Mersey and the Head, and had cast off her tug, and parted with her pilot, as with all her white sails spread, like wings of a gigantic albatross, she glided off msjestically on her long ocean-voyage.

Among the second-class passengers was Benefit Party of the p her long ocean-voyage.

Among the second-class passengers was Bendigo Bill. Lird Ulswater had kept his word. It was thenks to his patron's skill and his patron's purse that the ruffian was once more launched upon the world. The chase after this man had been a hot one. He was "wanted," and badly wanted, by the Home Office and the Scotland Yard prefect of police. But although a strict watch had been kept upon the outgoing ships bound for such familiar ports as New York and Philadelphia, no detectivo's imagination scared so high as to induce suspicion of tion soared so high as to induce suspicion of those occupying the Golden Gale's second-asbin. British reques do not often take ship for Cali-fornia, probably finding the fares heavy, and the market for their hypothetical industry glutted with native talent. And if a fraudulent bank-rupt or a bolting bank clerk might be expected to take refuge in so remote a region, the very expense and mystery of the voyage might be presumed to render it caviare to such a fugitive e William Huller.

The myrmidons of Justice, therefore, some The myrmidons of Justice, therefore, some representatives of whom were probably on the Mersey quays that day, took no heed of the silent middle-aged German, with the red beard, partly grisz'ed, the Tyrol hat, the speciacles, the braided frock-coat, meerschaum pipe, soiled gloves, and loose boots of patent leather, who came leisurely down to the water-side, a packet of foreign books under one arm, and a heap of cloaks encumbering the other. That High Dutchman, with his combined air of smartness, dirt, and erudition, might have been a doctor, a lecturer, a scientific traveller in quest of new butterflies or lickens from the other side of the world; but he looked as Teutonic as Karl the Great or Ritter Toggenburg. He had a friend with him, an Englishman, unmietakably a gen-tleman, who was very kind and attentive to the sbout to quit our who went on board with him. This gentleman had his right arm in a sling. Lord Ulswater it was who thus eccorted this pseudo-German on board the Golden Gate. He staved in the vessel to the last; and when the bell rang, and the cry was "For the shore," he left the clipper, in company with others who had lingered to pros the hands of the friends of whom they had seen the last" in England curely, perhaps on earth. There were men and women with wet cheeks, turning back to wave their handker-chiefs, even after the vessel had been towed so far down the river that the farewell signal could not be distinguished by even the keenest eye unassisted by a glass, and children whose father would be half a stranger to them when after many years, those so near in blood should meet

Among this little throng was a young man with a felt hat slouched over his eyes, and a well-worn velvet coat, out of one pocket of which protruded a small, green book, brass-clasped, a sketch-book plainly. Lord Ulswater's eye scarcely rested on this man at all. An artist was nothing new, and in no way interesting to him. Where had he seen just such a strolling fellow as that? In Shellton it was, and not long since, with which though! he dismissed the subject. But as for dreaming that the very hat, and the worn by the sketcher who was drawing by the roadside as he rode to the door of the manorhouse, were now within arm's length of him Liverpool, and were there because he was there, he would have laughed at the notion as absurd. He would not have been inclined to laugh, had he known that the supposed artist, dogging him like his shadow, watchful of his every movement, yet to all appearance beetowing no at-tention on him at all, was no other than James Sark.

For now Lord Ulawater, though blindly un aware of the fact, had in a great measure ceased to be in his own herping, to belong as it were, to himself, and was followed, and kept ward over, by an unsuspected foe. His confidence was in some measure coming back to him, now that he had got his liegeman, Bendigo Bill, snugly the alder and the ash, and the holly and the was pinued fown beneath the weight of a great and by inches, as it were, before his very eyec.

The best the time" made by Flora

Temple, and missersly failed.

The odds are enormous," he thought to him.

The odds are enormous, he thought to him.

self, "against the brute's return. Taos whiskey | western English shires, romantic brooks, claimand swamp-fevers, savage Indians and more savage miners, await my friend yonder; and it is hard if, in some gamblers' free-fight, a stray bullet or howie knife does not sijence Mr. Hul

Hope began to whisper in John Carnac's car and the music of her voice was welcome. fears had been all of legal proceedings; not that be had ever entertained much dread of a conviction, since the only tongue that could be tray him was mute for ever, but because enough would be revealed on even the most incomplete trial to blast his fair fame, and to make him a banished man for life, unpunished by the law, but excommunicated from all that makes life but excommunicated from all that makes life worth the having.

At the cost of great personal peril, trouble, and forethought, he had removed the chief stumbling-blocks out of his path. Loys was dead; Marsh was dead. The death of the man did not lie so directly at his door as did the death of the woman. He had been rexed at first to hear of the doctor's fate. His over-zealous servant had green per to implication him, just as Henry II's gone near to implicating him, just as Henry II.'s over-sealous servants had got their royal master into the worst of scrapes by slaying the Archbishop on his own chancel floor. But the affair had gone of unexpectedly well. The man who had i'd Lord Ulawater of an enemy was rafely shipped off to the uttermost parts of the earth, and no untimeous discovery had been made. It and no untimeous discovery had been made. It was better so. Two very dangerous witnesses were debarred from bearing testimony against John Carnao, until they should stand up to proclaim his sins upon the judgment-day.

Dupe, dullard that he was, with all his craft and all his subtlety! His eyes were dim, and his ears were deaf to the real sights and sounds of the coming doors. Director a hit for his enemy.

ears were deaf to the real sights and sounds of the coming doom. Digging a pit for his enemy, as cunning men, such as he, have done for ages unnumbered, he recked not of falling into it himself, to perish miserably. The bold stroke that was to make him safe for ever, was to prove his undoing. For his other mirdeeds, Nemeesis might have waited to punish beyond the temp: for the last wrong wrought, the the temb; for the last wrong wrought, the penalty must be paid on this earth, in this life, and in full.

John Carnac had been very successful. The Fiend had served him well in that tacit bargain of theirs. He had no thought of the wild German legend of the hunter who bought the magic bullets, never missing, and won high praise, and a forester's place, and the maiden be loved to be his wife, all with the rifle-bails of the demon's easting, and then—with the ran-dom shot that was to be the flend's portion, laid the betrethed pretty one bleeding, doad, at his feet. "Fifty go true, three go askew! So is it elsewhere than in the Harz Mountains or in the Schwarswald.

The shably artist in the velvet coat kept Lord Ulswater well in sight, watching him as he passed through the atrects, as he entered his hotel, as he left it, as he made his way to the railway station. With a vigilence that never relaxed, but with a caution that avoided any oc-tensible act which might apprise his foe of the unfriendly eye that was upon him, the man, turned blood-hound for the time, held stanchly to the trail. The Furies of pagan supersition sould not have followed the evil-doer with more fell a purpose or more pitiless patience. Yet, fearing nothing, and exulting in his success, Lord Ulswater took his place in the uptrain; fell a purpose of the continuous feating nothing, and exuting the uptrain; Lord Ulswater took his place in the uptrain; and in the same train, but in a different carriage, the shabby artist in the velvet coat took his place also. He had entered the telegraph-office the departure, and had sent a departure, and had sent a departure. shortly before the departure, and had sent a message along the wires, addressed to Greer and Starriker.

CHAPTER LXII.

REAPING THE WHIRL WIND.

The train thundered on, speeding as fast as the panting, laboring giant of steam could urge it, along the iron-way. On it swept, flying, rattling, bounding, in its mad hurry and haste, with rush and roar, down the steep gradients of the line. The gradients were steep thereabouts, a rlope sharper than is common, and the engine-driver was doing his very best to make up for lost time, and to save himself from fices. There had been verations delay at two stations, and the been vexatious delay at two stations, and the train was miles away from the point which it ought to have reached, according to Bradshau and the book of rules; and therefore this tre-mendous rush at top speed, without regard to "I'll make her do all ahe knows!" the driver had said to the sympathetic oker; and the engine, like a willing slave, torand whirled along at a pace not approved of by Parliamentary experts.

The line was not the direct line from Liver pool to London, but one of the iron ways that traverse the midland counties from north to Thanks to our liberal ways, the traveller in Britain may generally take his choice parallel roads to a given goal; and Lord Ule-water had doubled and twisted, and done his best to blind the trail, so that it was late in the afternoon of the day, the morning of which had seen the Golden Gale weigh anchor and go down the Mersey, seaward. It was still light, down the Mersey, seaward. however, for the day was fine and bright, not at all like the rainy forenoon of that dark day of the funeral of poor Loys.

The artist in the loose coat of threadbare velvet, sitting in a carriage behind that in which Lord Uiswater was seated, travelled as he travelled, alighting at junctions, taking fresh tickets, proceeding by the trains on short loop-lines that led to points whence London might be reached without any presumption that the starting-place had been Liverpool, riding behind Lord Ulewater, ever and always, like Black Care, and as hard to be shaken off. Lord Ulawater had at length noticed this assiduous pursuit, and had been annoyed by it. He looked hard at the man, more than once, as they two waited at some station. The shabby artist could scarcely be a policeman; he had not the stiffness which a drilled and stocked and belted man finds it so difficult to lay by with his uniform. A Private Inquiry Office might have such a bengle in its pay; but what should a person of that kind want with Lord Ulewater? It takes a full purse to set Private Inquirers in motion, and there was no full purse on the opposite side. A mera coincidence, most likely.

Ahead lay a bridge, epanning a stream of inconsiderable width, but with high banks, and deep holes where the trout loved to lie, lazily swaying their fins to and fro, and watching the

ing eleterhood with Dove, and Greta, and Wye, but unknown to fame, haunts of the nameless

The bridge was an old bridge allowing for the wear and tear which give but a short life to such constructions, and it needed repair. The Company's engineer-in-objef, going on his tour of inspection, had shaken his head at the condition of its iron girders, and had set it down in his half yearly Report as requiring thorough reparation. In the meanine, it was suffered to afford a prize specimen of the glorious uncertainty of railway management. The Becretary was unwilling to add the cert of realist for the tainty of railway management. The Secretary was towning to add the cost or repairs for the bridge to the already heavy bills for work and improvements: he had been manipulating his accounts very carefully and paignity, and he did not wish, nor did the directors wish, to add a feather to the camel-load of expenses under-which the sulky shareholders groaned. He had to face the shareholders at a meeting very shortly, and the larger the small balance and the infinitesimal dividend showed, the better; so the word was given to patch up the rickety bridge with temporary props and struts of timber; to caution the angine-drivers on the duty of crossing it at a slackened pace, and-

Crash! There was a roar and a groan, and a grinding, breaking, enapping, and straining of overtacked iron, rending of tortured timber, oreaking and fall of wooden beams; and then a half-heard clamor of terrified human volces, mocked, as it seemed, by the long roream of the steam-whistle that the startled engine-driver sounded, be knew not why, in his panie. The bridge rocked and recled, bent down, surged up, splitting into fragments, and with the engine and tender, and two-thirds of the carriages, went headlong down upon the rocks of the stream. Grash! There was a roar and a groun, and a headlong down upon the rocks of the stream.

The bridge had broken at last. With a sickening crash, down went all those tons of wood and iror, and the shricking human freight, down into the frothing stream.

into the frothing stream.

Two carriages, however, and the guard's van, closing the train, secaped scot-free. The coupling-chains and screws had snapped in twain, and they were left standing, alone and safe, on the very brink of the guif, off the rails indeed, but upright and uninjured. The artist in the frayed velvet coat was in one of these carriages.

A dreadful scene it was. Juggernaut—the Juggernaut of irresponsible officialism—was served well that day, and had his blood-sacrifice to the full. It was a light train, and half empty, but there was enough of ghastly horror to war-but there was enough of ghastly horror to war-rant the newspapers in announcing it, as they afterwards did, in the most conspicuous of capitals, and with copious details. Death and wounds, and pain and despairing fear ran riot amid that hapless company of travellers; for the amin that aspiese company of travellers; for the mounds of broken carriages and trucks, and the shattered engine, hissing hot, and exploding, like a shell from a mortar, as the cold water closed over its boiler: these heaps of material together formed a dam, checking the flow of the brook, and causing it to grow rapidly deeper, so that those not crushed, or torn, or scalded by the heated water that was hurled around, were yet in dire dauger of being drowned as they lay trapped among the fragments of the train.

A dreadful come. The ecreams of those in mortal terror blended with the wall of agony or the mosn of feebiences and suffering, and the who now scrambled from their carriages, and hurried to the rescue of those below. With all its horrors, the spectacle had one redeeming feature—selfishness had little or no scope there. been dragged with much ado, bruised and bleed ing, from amid the ruins of some wrecked car riage, lost no time in idle moans, but were active in rendering help to those worse off. As for those who had escaped the fall, they made their way in reckless haste down the steep bank, and worked eagerly, desperately, to tear away the masses of timber and irou beneath which some groaning victim lay, or to assist the half-drowned inmates of the carriages to draw themselves with broken bones, and faces disfigured, out of their prisons, into which the water was pouring.

Very great gallantry, devotion, and humanity, did th did these volunteer workers display, though what with the excitement of the rescuers, and the piteous ories of women seeking a husband, a child, or a parent, amid that panorama of de-vactation, misery, and anguish, a cool head was needed by any one who should exhibit present Luckily, the guard had such and while others were toiling frantically, with no guide but their generous instincts, he waded the water, and climbing the opposite bank, ran along the line, a flag in his band, to give the danger-signal to a down-train due at that spot within a few minutes, and to check the course of which was needful.

Several lives were lost, many persons were frightfully hort, and not one of the occupants of the fallen carriages but was more or less in-The engine-driver's body, much led, lay among the rocks, and stains of blood floated on the frothing surface of the deepening stream. In one place, the water had overflowed a broken carringe, forming a tiny cascado as it swirled by, overleaping the dam at this its lowes point. From that carriage, no living human being was ever drawn forth; those in the only occupied compartment, three persons, were al

Further down the brook, and at a few pages distance from the rest of the train, lay the remains of another first-class carriage. It was riven to pieces as to the roof and floor, and through its breached sides the water, carrading over the dam above, flowed freely. There was over the dam above, flowed freely. There was a hollow of some depth in the bed of the stream, hard by, hennied in by rocks, and to one of these a wounded man clung with despairing clutch, his head and breast just visible above the water. Lord Ulswater! He wast hurt, but not unto death. The fearful shock of the fall had deep holes where the trout loved to fie, lazity swaying their fies to and fro, and watching the silvery minnows ewimining from the gravelly shallows inshere. A pretty stream, with a rocky however, was not the worst of the plight in however, was not the worst of the plight in which Lord Ulswater, hitherto a favorite of fortune, to aller and the ach, and the holly and the hazel, overhung the steep banks, draped with hazel, overhung the steep banks, draped with hursel foxglove and dark ive —a stream such as the steep holes of word and iron that lay half immersed, the row was the man he so hated brought for the rocks. This, however, was not the worst of the plight in which Lord Ulswater, hitherto a favorite of Fortune, to all appearance, was now found. He was plaused down beneath the weight of a great and by inches, as it were, before his very eyes. Here was the man he so hated brought low in pressing on his hody as he strove to extricate the dead and on the very threshold of a lingering to the nimost to support its fatal pressure, threatened to drag him down with it, helpiese, to drow in the smooth pool below.

Thus he was found—found by a man who came bounding, hurrying, wading the brook, springing from rock to rock, evidently seeking some one for whom he had hitherto hunted in vain among the dead and dying that were being gradually brought from amid the wreck and roin above. Whoever had seem this seeker, stayed by no call, or shrisk, ar prayer for aid, but rushing on upon his quest, would have deemed him to be in search at some one very dear to him, for whose sake he passed others by. But such was not the case. The man wore a shabby velvet cost and a peaked hat of soft felt. He sprang down, knee-deep, into the water.

"Are you much burt?" he asked eagerly, but

"Are you much burt?" he asked engerly, but in a strangs tone, of Lord Ulswater.

Lord Ulswater looked up, and knew him for the wan who had dogged him all that day—knew him too, so quick is memory, in the same instant, for the artist whom he had seen sketching the manor-house at Shellton. He made no answer then, but became still paler than he had been before, and fixed his glittering eyes steadily on the new-comer, and so stood, breathing hard beneath the weight of the mass of wood and iron.

and iron.
"You expect aid from me, Lord Ulswater, "You expect aid from me, Lord Ulswater," said the man in the velvet coat, thrusting back his hat so as the better to show his face. That face was dark with a sudden fush of blood to the hitherto pallid cheeks, and the haggard eyes looked vengefully into those of the woonded man. "Look at me. We are strangers, Can you not read my name, written here in my face?"

There was a pause. Lord Ulawater's postrile

There was a pause. Lord Ulswater's nostrils dilated, and his eyes darkened, and his very lips grew white, but no word escaped him.

"My name is James Bark.—Ah, I see you knew it before I uttered the words," said the man, approaching nearer to Lord Ulswater. "I am Loys Bark's husband. It was my wife whom you left dead on the floor of that hut where there was none to help her. And now, John Carnae, lay hope aside, for as I believe there is a God in heaven above us, so do I believe there is a God in heaven above us, so do I believe there was none. Look not for pity; it is dead in mekilled along with my murdered darling. We are face to face at last. You have escaped death this day in many an ugly shape, but you shall not escape rac."

And then there was another silence, only broken by the deep uneven breathing of Lord Ullarater, striving nodes the weight of the mass.

broken by the deep uneven breathing of Lord Ulswater, striving under the weight of the mass that bore him down—a long and terrible silence. The two men, face to face, gazed steadily on one another, and for a long space neither spoke.

CHAPTER LXIII.

THE ACCOUNT IS CLOSED

Lord Ulswater, lying in the shallow water on the edge of the deep pool, and clinging to the rock with a conveisive clutch that alone enabled rock with a convolate clutch that alone enabled bim to support the weight of the beavy beep of ruin in which he was entangled, looked up into his enemy's face, and read his doom there. The fluch of wrathful triumph had faded from that face, and Sark, as pale as the foe beneath him, looked cold, collected, and pittless in his white race, grimt surveying the man who had so rage, grimly surveying the man who had so rage, grimly surveying the man who had so wronged him, beaten, coaquered at last. It was an awful mement for both.

But Lord Ulewater, in that supreme hour of despairing unisery, hetrayed no unmanly weakness. He met the other's glare with eyes that never finoched, and not so much as the quivering of a lip betrayed emotion. It is one of the strangest anomalies in poor human nature, that with all our fears, and all our shrinkings from the grave and from the punishment beyond the the grave and from the punishment beyond the grave, with all our abborrence of pain, and love of ease, and life-long dread of the common fate, most of us die well. It is not only the martyr, most of us die well. It is not only the martyr, or the saint strong in faith and zeal, that can meet the King of Terrors at the last, unfaltering; meet the King of Terrors at the last, unfaltering; not only the hero on the battle field, or the patriot on the scaffold. The sad records of the Place de Greve, like those of our own Tyburn, tell how steadily and well the vast majority of sufferers hore the worst that cruelty could inflict, and died without a sign of fear. So this Borgia, this monster of wickedness, who has been known through these pages by the name of Lord Ulewater, looked up, smiling, at the threatening foe who stood, seewing, so near him in that dreadful moment of helpissness.

As for Sark, he was as one transformed. The

As for Sark, he was as one transformed. The empanions who knew him best might have failed to recognize in this pale avenger the good-humored, high-mettled comrade whom they had wned as something better and more generous than themselves. His features were set and plached as if by illness or by pain, and his eyes gowed with the fires of kate till their brightness recomed unmatural. No one knows what a latent release the heart of any reputed good fellow may prove, or what smouldering savagery lies e sled beneath the habitual mask of an easy temper and a genial disposition.

The actual duration of the silence which remed so long was really brief enough, three minutes or less; and it was broken—that slience —by a loud cry, a call for help, from Lord Ulswater's lips, one long, desperate effort to summon assistance in this direnced. "Help! help!" was the cry, and the sullen schoes from the hol-low in the beetling bank above gave back the sound, "help?" as in scorn. No help came. The call was unbeeded in the midet of that Babel of shrill screams and mounings, and shouts and camor, where the few men able to work were tearing at the panels of the smashed carriages, and wading the deepening stream. No hope of attracting attention in the midst of that scene of tunuit and dismay! Lord Ulawater made no further attempt to call for aid, but met the harmed him less than it had done to many of his fellow-sufferers, but he was bare-headed, and there was a narrow thread of blood trickling perhaps; you know best!" said Sark grinly, slowly down from a slight cut upon one of his slowly down from a slight cut upon one of his temples, half hidden by his golden har, loose and disnevelled now. He was holding on to the rock by his uninjured left hand. The right arm, which he had worn in a sling, hung broken by his side. It was that hurt received in the struggle, several nights ago, in the cottage among the gardens, which had caused the bandaging of the burden that weighed him down, and he drew gardens, which had caused the bandsging of the hand, the support of the sling, and thind down, and he drew hand, the support of the sling, and thind the breath with difficulty.

onged for this-thiresed and eraved for thisfor a signal restribution to fail on that loathed head. The blow had fallen; yet James Sark was disappointed. The revenge for which he had se panted was not so sweet to the palate as it had been to the fancy beforehand. Revenge never is. Of all the joys that turn to dust and sabes in the fruition, gratified vengeance is per naps the most workliess.

As he stood, watching the dying struggles of this man, where head was to him as a wolf's head, to be struck, and not spared, he could not keep up the heat of his rage as he had done when Lord Ulswater was in the pride of his strength. There lay the hated wretch, with his fatal beauty of face unmarren by bodily auffering or mental pangs, sirriched like Prometheus on his rock, enduring, defeated, defant in his on his rock, enduring, defeated, defiant in his unpitted pain. There seemed to Sark's wayward computed pain. There seemed to Bark's wayward hears to be something dastardly, something that lowered him in his own exteem even below the level of she slayer of his wife, in seeing this drowning man go down without excetching a hand to help him.

But the image of Loys, dead upon the floor of the old Dutch gardener's cottage, rose up and served him afrech. Here, still alive, was the morderer. "Hark you, Mr. Carnac," the Manx-man said, stooping over him; "I am wiser than you, with all your elevernees. I risk nothing, I No act of parliament forbids me to stand by and see you get your deserts in this world, before you get them in the world to come. I, a jall-bird and a rogue, am your judge and ex-ecutioner at onde, yet I transgress none of the I shall see that fair false face of yours sink down beneath the water..."

"You are a cowardly car!" interrupted Lord Ulawater gasping. Perhaps the remembrance of his hideous dream—come true now—stung

Sark larghed hoarsely. "You are wrong, Mr. Carnac; I am not a coward. I've jumped over-board in the Trader, to pick up a poor child drowning before his parenta' eyes, ay I when the chark's back-fin was waving above the water, and not a man else of crew or passengers dared make the plungs. I have saved three lives, each time coming off safe, but only by the skin of my teeth, as we sailors say. I never let man, or woman, or child die for want of a helping-hand, as I'll let you die, Mr. Carnac.'

He pansed but an instant, and then went on, speaking in a low but very distinct voice: "You wonder, if you can think of anything but the well-deserved death you are so near to, why I call your Lordship Mr. Carnac. For this reason, you are no more Lord ! lewater than I amno more a peer of England than you are pope of Rome, and St. Pagans belongs to you about as much as Windsor Castle belongs to mc. Your nephew is alive!"

There was surprise, but incredulous, scornful

James Sark resumed : "Your nephew, whom you thought that you had murdered, not by your own hands, but by the hands of Loys Fieming—he is alive!"

Lerd Unwater gave a groan like that of a wounded lion, driven to bay, and bleeding under the spears. "You lie, thief!" he made answer. Bark's reply was spoken with a cool bitterhief I am. But what are you, John I have been a lawbreaker, and if the law gets hold of me, must pay the penalty; but you are worse a thousandfold. I have usurped o innocent child's inneritance, broken no brother's heart, blishted no maiden's same, mur-dered no insant, butchered no woman. You have done all these things. John Carnec, you

For the first time, a quick shiver, as of cold, san through Lord Unwater's frame, and his tan through Lord thewater's frame, and his features quivered, and his eyelide drooped; but he lifted them again, and looked up at Sark, half in defiance, half inquiringly.

"Mr. Carnac," said his enemy, drawing nearer your nephew is alive, and in the care of those who will help him to his rights. Loys, his nurse, decaived you, and deceived the doctor, when she told you both how the child Guy Carnso lay buried, fathoms deep, in the sea that beats against the abbey cliff. She spared him, We reared him, and cared for him, under anname, in Australia. There are written of this extant, and depositions have been before a magistrate. To-morrow, I shall taken before a magistrate.

Lord Ulewater, and you, Mr. Carnac- Hat"
For at that instant there was heard the shrill whictle of an approaching train, then a hurried cry, a shout taken up by many voices, and soon afterwards the tramp of many feet. On they came at a run, these new comers, eager and willing to render aid to the miserable sufferers

They shall not save you !" cried Sark excitedly. He had in his hand a heavy piece of wood three feet long or more, which he had caught up in passing among the broken car riages. This fragment, with its jagged edges, made a formidable club at need, and this he now lifted over Lord Ulswater's unguarded head. "Dis, you butcher!" he said in harsh secents. whirling back the weapon; but something held back his arm, and the blow did not fall. The good and bad that were in the man were striving for mastery. With all his wrongs and all his bate, he could not strike down this powerless foe, unresisting, looking into his face noise of running feet and shouting voices drew

John Carnac ground his teeth together. His overstrained sinews could bear no more. For several minutes he had upborne a load that would have crushed the life out of a weaker man, and even his forces were spent. His breath came but in gaspe; the cold death-devs were on His heart scarcely could beat, and the chill of the last dreadful moments of partiag Life froze his veine. For the world and all its prizes and clories he could not have held on The train had come, and rescue had but not for him. Too late—too late for all but one thing !

Sark," he said, in a broken whisper, " is the comer. boy's claim—the proof-dependent on youranswered the Manuman, bending near It is," answered the wanted the you are ot so; tell your own tale to the Master of us both," cried Lord Uliswater with a sudden fercessess. "Die fool, as I die!" His right arm, broken, hung nesless; but he now let go his hold of the rock, and, with his left hand, made a grasp at Sark's throst, so quick, and water is dead!"

sleeve of Sark's coat was ripped up from shoulsleeve of Bark's coat was ripped der to elsow; and then, with a gurgling sob, John Carnac, Lord Ulewater, de facto in the peerage of England, sank down beneath the surface of the stream, and gasped out his latest breath in those drowning depths of the dark

He was quite dead and cold when they found him lying there, alone.

CHAPTER LXIV. ONE PERSAGE THE LINE

Greer and Starriker were in their office to gether, and not alone. The presence of both pares, for more than ten minutes at a time, within the compass of their business premiser, was of itself sufficient to show that the cossion was shnormally important. For, just as we see some husbands and some wives always apart, so the members of this legal firm had each of them his own line and his own department, to which he adhered tenaciously. Starriker took the broadly humorous business, Greer the genteel comedy They were very good friends, but they did not meet every day; and Mr. Starriker was emphatically the outdoor partner, preferring to see his clients at public-houses, where liquor might lighten law. To-day, he was in attendance at office, carefully dressed, sedate, and eilent. Hold your toogue, Starriker; you are a dab at the witnesses, and good at elections, but I must menage this in my own way, please"-had been the well-meant advice of the senior and less jocular partner.

In the office, as well as Mesers. Greer and Starriker, were three persons. One of these three was l'rofessor Brum, who looked eminently uncomfortable, but who was shaved, and brushed, and washed, to enable him to pass muster in that goodly company. Also there were two strangers—one young, the other old. The junior, who was a dandy of some pretensions, was a trim young gentleman of three-and-thirty or thereabouts, with colorless hair and whiskers very neatly arranged, with the loveliest Neapoli tan charms rattling on his guardchain, and a backbone officially stiff. He was the sort of young gentleman of whom it might safely be predicted that his father must be an Honorable Mister, or his mother a Lady Frances; that he had been pitchforked somehow into a private secretaryship in some government department and that he was much admired by himself and the young ladies that he could not afford to marry, as dreadfully satirical and distressingly

Mr. Standish Wintle had, indeed, to his own infinite disgust, been sent from the Home Office to "look into" the Carnac affair, to take counsel with tenth rate attorneys of no good odor in the profession, and to be brought into personal con tact with thieves, coiners, and the like. It was "police business," as he remarked indignantly to a friend and copyist of his own. Worse still his chief had thought proper to send a lega dry-nurse along with him in the shape of a shrewd gray-headed solleitor, confidentially busy at the Home Office, and who not seldom had the right to call Britannia his client.

Charges such as those against a man of such rank and reputation as the rank and reputation of Lord Ulawater are serious things, having an awkward tendency to recoil upon those who pre-fer them; therefore, Greer and Starriker had acted with delicacy in this matter, communica ting with the Home Office, instead of risking all by a direct application to the county magis trates for that reaside shire where Shellton was situated. The Home Office had responded to the summons, not very willingly, but perforce. our days, and in our country, officials live i mortal dread of the lash of the public press, and have at once a nervous horror of doing too much and of doing too little. It is no disgrace, after ail, to a Secretary of State that he should very much prefer his tenure of power to be as a maides nesize. The trying and convicting of peer of the realm on several ugly charges, was what could, under no circumstances, be agree duty at best. But to be stigmatized as head of the Circumlocution Office has peculiar terrors for the British bureaucrat in these times of thinskinned sensitiveness to print, and therefore Standish Wintle and the sensible attorney were at the office of Greer and Starriber.

Proofs had been laid before them, proofs not enough, perhaps, for a jury, but quite sufficient to make an investigation of the affair imperative. be by appointment at a lawyer's office with the young lord. He—l'aui West—I may tell you his feigued name now without fear—is the true was the written confession of poor Loys. There was the written confession of poor Loys. There was the written confession of poor Loys. was the gold sleeve link picked up from the floor Claphau school, as well as the expenses of his will break under certain circumstances, as when of the Dutch gardener's wooden but in which the murdered woman had been found. were two scraps of notes in the handwriting of the deceased Siephen March, M. R. C.S., addressed to Loys, and relating to the affair. Brum, apprised by the telegram sent by James Sark that his nephew Bendigo Bill was safe, had made what he called a clean breast of all he knew, without, however, mentioning the garrot-ter by name. The sensible lawyer shook his gray head, and even the superfine Standish admisted that the case had a dark look.

So they waited. Sark it was for whose com-ing they waited. No one, not even Brum, had seen the Manaman since his return from Liver pool, but he had telegraphed a second message to Greer and Starriker, promising to be at the office at the time appointed, and to bring with him the boy, Guy Carnac, the genuine Lord Uis water, against whose life his near relative and heir-presumptive had practised, and whose birth right had been usurped.

But Sark was behind time. The whole story of the kidnapping of the young heir, that of the murder of Stephen March, and that of the murder of Loye, had been told and commented upon and Sark came not. Even the Professor was puzzled, while Standish Wintle was personally aggrieved by the disrespect of the absentee to-wards his sublime self. Everything waited for Sark, who alone held the clue of these intricate affairs, and who was impatiently looked for a the man who could explain away incongrui ties, and throw light upon dark last there was a step on the threshold, and a hum of voices, and the clerk admitted the new-

Sark-but so pale and baggard, that he ecomed but as a ghost, the ghost of his former self, be-lated in the daylime. He looked old and ill, and very dejected, but his bearing showed no touch of fear, despite the presence of such a govern-ment luminary as Mr. Wintle, baleful to trush

"I have kept you waiting, gentlemen," said James, looking around, "but it was unavoidable. I have had news to tell you. Lord Uisstrong, and deadly in its fell intent, that all the There was a general outery. "Dead!" And Manxman's activity hardly saved him from that suspicious glances were directed at Sark, who gripe, never to be loosened. As it was, the met them without flinching. There was a general outcry. "Dead!" And

He smiled-a sad smile it was

"I see, gentlemen," he said, in a resolute tone that carried the force of truth with it—"I see you think I killed him. It is known to you all you think I killed him. It is known to you all how I hated him, and with what good cause, speak in your interest," interrupted the solici-tor who had come in company with Standish Wintle; "don't do it." It was distressing to that worthy man to hear a man bear witness against himself, a thing odious to English juris rudence.

Sark smiled, more sadly still. "Lord Ulswater, -or, I should say, Mr. Car-nac-did not meet with his deserts in the way you suppose," he said, quietly. "He was in the train that met with that accident at Charnle Bridge yesterday. He was among the killed. I who was a passenger by that train, escaped un-hurt. I saw his body, with those of the others who were drowned, carried to the inn two miles off. I shall attend the inquest, if you think proper, gentlemen," the man added, looking steadily in the faces of those who looked

"But the boy ?" cried Mr. Greer, with a long

Sark shook his head.
"There was a saying of my old father's, that I've had cause to bear in mind this day," he said, gloomily, fixing his eyes upon the ground, and that was, that we ought not to do evil that good may come of it. Now I see we were wrong about the little lord. I meant no harm; and Loys, poor sweetheast, meant no-thing but kindness, when she and I put the child to school at Clapham, never intending that the young one should be cheated of his own to the last. But we thought it was mighty fine and mighty clever to act so, keeping back the little lord as a finessing player keeps back a court-card, and bringing him to claim his rights just when it suited our game. So much the worse, so much the worse," added Sark, turning his head away.

The rust of those present, all but Brum, exchanged glances. The Professor coughed be-hind his worsted glove.
"Can't you explain yourself, my good man?"

asked Standish Wintle, adjusting his necktle with a peevish air. "This is a very irregular sort of thing, and you will think twice about it, if you are wise, before you trifle with govern

Brum shuffled with his feet, and coughed again, apologetically.

"I'm sure, gentlemen, begging pardon," said he, "that Jem Sark don't intend to trifle with ne, that Jem Sark don't intend to trille with anybody. Don't you see he's trying to tell us something, and can't get the words out. I'm afraid I can guess what, eh, Jem?" and the Professor sidled up to Sark, patting his shoulder kindly, as an amiable bear might have done. The Manxmen passed the back of his sunbrowned hand across his eyes, which were wet and glistening. He lifted his head, and confronted the company.

"Gentlemen ail," said James Sark, "I'm afraid I've given you a deal of trouble to no good end. There's no one left alive to be disgraced and pulled down out of his high place that he'd no right to; there's no one left alive to inherit the title that was wrongfully assumed. Guy, Lord Ulswater, that pretty boy, the little fellow his uncle murdered in will, if not in fact—he's dead too. Some other illness— I forget the Latin name the doctor gave it-laid the fever; and though the schoolmaster wrote to me, I never got the letter, ranging the country as I did, a hunted man. When I reached the Clapham school this morning, I heard the bad news-the doctor met me coming out-they didn't expect the child to live through the day. And so it proved. He knew me, pretty little chap, and put his innocent face to mine, as I bent over him. "Kiss Aunt Loys for me, Jem; wish dear Loys good-bye." Those were the last sensible words he ever spoke. He didn't know she was dead, you see, and I hadn't the heart to teil him. He died on my shoulder, an hour ago, quite gently, like one that falls asleep. And now, centlemen, the real Lord Ulawater is dead, and it seems to me now—to live for or to care for in

It had been James Sark's intention to devote his savings to the purpose of paying for the funeral of poor little Paul West, so called at the age, before the mast, to America. But Mr. Heythrop, the so-licitor from the Home Office, being good-natured, and acquainted with the great firm of Castles and Taping, gave a hint to those respectable solicitors, which caused them to take the whole urden of cost upon themselves, subject to pros pective repayment from the heir at law to arnac landed property; and there is no reaso to believe that the Gloucestershire or untitle branch of that ancient family grudged this ex penditure in behalf of one whom they privately acknowledged to have been the legitimate owner

St. Pagans passing as of right to the Carnace of Gionocetershire, Lady Harriet Ashe had neces-sarily to seek another home. She has found one in Mentene Crescent, Cheltenham, where she reigns a quiet reign over a pretty large segment of the spinster society of that famous watering She is growing very serious in these la iora Hastings is mentioned in her hearing; for Flora Hastings is acquiring the bad eminence of a desperate flirt, celebrated in Paris, Baden, ice, and Biarritz for the hearts she has flawed. f not broken, for the mischief she has done, an and then laughed at. She takes a dreadfu pleasure in troubling the course of true leve, naking engaged men act basely to the betrothed one, and in marring the most judicious arrange ments. Chaperons of both sexes are furious breaking off of her daughter's engagement at

Yes, Flora is much changed, and for the The miserable death of Lord Unwater might of itself have softened and chastened her wickedness, exquisitely painful at the time, after wards hardened her disposition, and gave a dash of recklessness to her character and conduct, ich as often results in tolerably good women rom their finding themselves deceived. gradually developed latent qualities of which ier relatives had no previous idea; among others, those of an imperious will and a petu-lant temper, which gave her a mastery over others, as such wills and tempers usually do. She dragged her mother abroad, much to that lady's yet attained to."

disgust, and has never consented since to be brought back to England for more than a month

Old Benjamin Huller died in hospital. James Sark was careless for a time of everything, ran considerable risk of being retaken, and sent back to complete his term of banishment in Western Australia. From this he was saved, however, partly by the forbearance of the Home Office, which, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, winked at the returned transport's of the case, winked at the returned transport's irregular absence from his place of exile, and partly by the assiduity of old Brum, who gave him no rest till they were both clear out of England. They arrived safely in America, and are understood to be earning an honest livelihood in one of the manufacturing towns on the Sus quebanns, where Sark's great practical abilities as a machinist and draughtsman have acquired for him the post of foreman in a factory, with a prospective share in the concern. But he is a broken-spirited man; grave, industrious, unsmil-ing; quite another person from the merry vaga-bond of old days. He, too, is reputed to be grow-ing serious, but in another and more earnest de-gree than Lady Harriet. The loss of Loys has

Greer and Starriker were by no means sent empty-handed away. For a while, indeed, the junior partner was despondent as to any return for trouble and costs out of pocket. But Mr. Greer knew better. He was well aware that men are never so liberal as when a fortune has devolved upon them in so sudden a fashion as to be reckoned as a windfall; and indeed the distant cousins, who now inherited the abbey and the lands, and who are to be baronets as soon as a new promotion adds to the number of that order, and peers, perhaps, if they steer clear of matrimonial and political blunders for a generation or so, were willing to pay something hand-some to keep a public stigma from being affixed some to keep a public stigms from being affixed to the name of Carnac. Greer and Starriker's black-mail was forthcoming. But although public scandal was averted, al-though the death of John, Lord Ulswater, an orator of promise and a nobleman of high cha-racter, was deplored in decorous newspaper paragraphs, evil things were whispered abroad concerning the dead man, and in the families of concerning the dead man, and in the families of Hastings. Ashe, and Carnac, much was known, and much more was conjectured with tolerable accuracy. The wrong that had been done was never righted; the orphan heir was never openly spoken of, save as Paul West, and the peerage of Ulswater was officially supposed to expire with its late possessor, John Carnac.

THE EED.

It is asserted that there are in this city at least seven thousand people who wear false eyes. There are two or three places here where eyes. There are two or three places here where false eyes are made and inserted. One house informs the public that "persons deprived of an eye can have this deformity-removed by the insertion of an artificial one, which moves and looks like the natural organ. No pain when inserted. Patients at a distance, having a broken eye, can have another one made without calling personally."

The manufacture of these eyes is done en-

The manufacture of these eyes is done entirely by hand. A man sits down behind a jet of gas flame, which is pointed and directed as he wishes by a blow pipe.

The pupil of the eye is made with a drop of black glass imbedded in the centre of the iris. The blood-vessels seen in the white of the eye are easily put in with red glass, while the optic is glowing with heat like a ball of gold. The whole eye can be made inside of an hour and whole eye can be made inside of an hour, and is at once ready to put in. The reader should know that it is simply a thin glass shell, which is intended to cover the stump of the blind eye.
After being dipped in water the shell is slipped in place, being held by the cyclids. The secret of imparting motion to it depends upon working the glass eye so that it shall fit the stump; if it is to large, it will be started in the stump. is too large, it will not move; if it fits nicely, it moves in every particular like the natural eye, and it is quite impossible, in many cases, to tell one from the other. The operation is not in the least painful, and those who have worn them a number of years feel better with them in than when they are out. A glass eye should be taken out every night and put in in the morning. In three or four years the false eye becomes so worn that a new one has to be obtained Some factory, keep a box of glass eyes on hand in case of accident, for, besides wearing out, they

"Hate's last lightning quivers from his eyes." -American Artisan.

The angelic of our race die early. Preperfume the temple and expire.

One hour lost in the morning will put all the business of the day; an hour gain by rising early will make one month in the year.
Thysiognomy is a true ecience. The man of profound thought, the man of ability, and, above all, the man of genius, has his character stamped by nature; the man of violent passions and the voluptuary have it stamped by

Pears are, almost without exception, imroved by early picking and ripening in-doors.

George Peabody was recently given the orary degree of LL.D. by Harvard College, an institution to which he has been quite generous. The London Cosmopolitan thinks that the college gave this degree, not for Mr. Peabody's "learning in the law," but for his other "great cife".

groat gifte."

The only fruit which grows in every climate is the strawberry. It is the only fruit which somewhere on the earth is picked every day the year round.

A fellow was kicked out of an editorial room, the other day, for impudently stating that "he had seen in Germany a fiddle so large that it required two horses to draw the bow across the strings, which would continue to sound for six weeks!"

the catablishment of seminaries for your ladice, where "spinology, knitology, weaveology, cookology, etc., can be taught—the graduates to receive the degree of F. F. W., or Fit for Wives.

FARINAS —Rev. Dr. Bellows, writing of Cologne, says: "At least twenty original Jean Maria Farinas keep up the manufacture of the Gologne, says: "At least treets original scan Maria Farinas keep up the manufacture of the most popular perfume that ever refreshed the nostrile of fainting women. It is natural that the worst smelling place in Christendom should have invented the best artificial odor. Parents baptize their children to entitle them to use the name in the manufacture of cologne water, a foresight which our American enterprise has not

Children.

Cleverness may be dear-bought—in the young especially so. The pear is a serious matter for the oyster, its preduction being the result of a disease. And so cleverness in the young is very disease. And so cleverness in the young is very often schieved at the cost of their physical and even their mental health. It is well that this should be known, at a time when books are written about the boyhood of great men, with the object of furnishing illustrious examples for the imitation of children, and of exciting them to greater ardor in the cultivation of their tender little intellects. Cleverness is unnatural in a child, and is achieved at the expense of nature. The proper food of the child is not to be found on booksellers' shelves, as many people now seem to suppose: the milkwoman and the baker are more to be depended on.

For the child are needed—first fresh size

For the child are needed-first, fresh For the child are needed—first, fresh air, cleanliness, and wholesome food; then, in addition to these, play, romps and physical exercise, by which its bodily powers may be strengthened; then, moral discipline and good example, for the training of its habits, temper, and disposition; and, last of all, literary culture and scholastic exercises. But to begin with teaching, or to set exercises. But to begin with teaching, or to be a child to tasks at an early age, is to interfere with the order of nature, and to risk the pro-duction of deformity and disease, instead of the "sound mind in the sound body." In early years "sound mind in the sound body." In early years the human being merely requires abundant opportunities to grow. It does not thrive with "coddling," either bodily or mental. The brain, which is, in some mysterious way or other that cannot be explained, connected with the productions of thought, is, of all other organs, the most delicate in childhood. The nervous system which is the course of all wital general ways. tem, which is the source of all vital energy, pre-dominates over the other systems in youth; and dominates over the cuer systems in youn; am if it be over-exercised, then it is certain to be at the expense of the other parts of the body, at the time when the highest vital powers are required, and when nature is endesvoring to perrequired, and when natural states of the physical system. By early mental culture, it is quite possible to make any child "clever," as it is called, and to cram its little head with knowledge, which is in the child quite out of place. But your precocious childre prodigies of infantile wisdom—are rare prodigies of infantile wisdom—are rarely long-lived; and if the strength of their constitution should bear them themselves shattered frame and an enfeebled intellect.

It is true, many poets have been pre-It is true, many poets have been precocious; though poesibly moet of the wonderful things recorded of such have been discovered, or greatly embellished, by biographers, after their fame has been established. Tasso's childhood was distinguished by signs and wonders. He would rise and study in the night, and the day never surprised him in bed. At eighteen he produced his first epic poem; and he went on writing until he became mad, and died in that state at the age of thirty two afters long and lament. at the age of thirty two, after a long and lament-able confinement in a dungeon.

Keats was a clever boy at school; he was so devoted a student there that his master had frequently to force him into the open air for his health, and then he would walk out with a book in his hand. Having precociously "beat his music out," he died at the early age of twentyfive. Yet many of our greatest poets have dis-played no precedity in youth: happily for them, they have in nothing differed from the run of ordinary boys. Others have been kept away from school on account of ill-health, and only acquired learning after their physical system had become matured and strengthened. This was the case with Walter Scott. He was not taught to read until he had reached his seventh year, and then it was at a dame-school at Bath. Afterwards he went to the High School at Edinburgh; but there he says, "I did not make any

Even at the Edinburgh University, where his father afterwards entered him, he succeeded no better. There he went by the hickname of "The Great Blockhead;" and Professor Dalyell, he says, "pronounced upon me the severe sentence, that dunce I was, and dunce was to reach!"

Take Chatterton next, the so-called "boy of genius." Yet, so far from being a boy of genius, when sent to school he either could not or would not learn, and he was returned upon his mother's not learn, and he was returned upon his mother a hands as "a fool, of whom nothing could be made." His mother then tried to teach him, but she also failed. Yet the boy afterwards learned fast enough when he began to educate himself, and obtained a stimulus to the acqui-

Dryden displayed no evidence of more than ordinary intelligence until he reached mature manbood; and Johnson said of Goldsmith that he was "a plant that flowered late." Schiller was a very idle scholar, and much fonder of ball and leap frog than of books. But the great majority of the most distinguished men-esp cially of those distinguished for their powerbasis of those distinguished for their powers have been altogether undistinguished in their boyhood. Sir Isaac Newton, perhaps our greatest man, stood very low in his class at school, and was a very inattentive scholar, though he was fond of mechanical poreuits and of drawing various natural objects. The distinguished Sir Humphrey Davy said of himself fortunate that I was left so much to myself when a child, and put upon no particular plan of study, and that I enjoyed so much idleness at Mr. Coryton's school I perhaps owe to the circumstances the little talents that I have and their peculiar application. What I sm I have made myself. I say this without vanity and in Every man who achieves prestness does so, not through his acquirements under teachers when a boy, but through his self-education after he has become a man. Napoleon and Wellington were both dull boys. The former is described by the Duchess of Abrantes, who knew him intimately when a child, as "having good health, and in other respects he was like other boys;" and she adds: "My uncles have a thousand times assured me that Napoleon in his boyhood had none of that singularity of character attributed to him."

We have, indeed, an aversion to infantile prodigies of any sort. They are things out of keeping with nature—luna nature. Very often your prodigy is but a disease, and ought no more to what is the end of your young Roscius ter feebleness if not cut short by death—the frequent penalty of premature excitement of Parents need not be in any hurry the brain to see their children's talents developed. best policy is to watch and wait; good example and quiet training do their Give the child a stock of physical health; set the boy fairly on the road of self-cuiture, and as he grows older, if there be the right stuff in him, the man will cultivate himself.

Natural Laws Moral, and Moral Laws Natural.

BY REV. HENRY WARD BEECHER.

There is no one thing that it is more important There is no one thing that it is more important that men should understand than the truth that every part of their nature is acting under a moral government, whose laws, being broken, punish the transgressor. There inheres in all moral laws an inavitable penalty. Things which the law of the land and which public sentiment do not consider transgressions are set factors of do not consider transgressions are yet factors of character. A man may do things which are not forbidden by his fellow-men, but which are fer-bidden by the way in which he is made. There is no law against a man's reading at untimely hours. Yes, there is. Where is the statute-book in which that law is written? In the ball and neive of the eye. God wrote it there. Hunt cverywhere in books for a written law of God that a man must not read by twilight, and you cannot find it; but it is written in the eye, though you do not feel it. There is no law that a man must not eat indigestible food. Yes, there is. Was it preclaimed from Mount Sinai? No. Your stomach is your Mount Sinai for such laws as that. Transgress it and see. Is that which a man writes in a book more a law than that which God writes in his flesh, his bones, his nervee? All artificial and civil laws adapted to physical functions are but new expressions of natural laws. Are these natural laws less important because they are inevitably relf-execu-ting, self-punishing? Men seem to think it is a great thing to violate a law that is printed in a great thing to violate a law that is printed in a book, or a law that has a magistrate to enforce it; but a law that is printed in a man's body, and that has the whole power of nature and all the vigillares of God behind it, to execute it, they seem to think there is no great danger in violating. It is desirable that every young man should understand that there is no part of human conduct left outside of natural law—or, in other ords, moral law. Men divide laws into different classes. They say that there is a law which relates to the fireh, to the body, and a law which relates to the mind. But the body is not more natural than the mind. The mind is natural, and the law of the intellect is a natural law. The moral nature is natural, and the law of the moral feelings is a natural law. That law which harmonizes you with your fellow-man is a natural law. Is that a natural law which determines the fact that weights shall gravitate to the earth? Is that a natural law which governs the process of diges-tion? Is that a natural law which controls the various functions of the body? And is that not a natural law which determines men's thoughts and motives, and the results which are wrought out by one and another class of faculties in life? There is no more mischievous tendency possible than to bring up a generation of men with the impression that moral laws wait with their penalties till after men die and the judgment day comes. I repeat, that all natural laws are moral laws. You sin against God when you sin against your foot; you sin against God when you sin against your hand; you sin against God when you sin against your brain, or any part of yourself, as really—though perhaps not as seri-ously, not as heinously—as when you sin against your neighbor, or against the whole of society and its interests. When you violate a natural law, you violate a moral law that is wrapped up in it. There is no such distinction of names in the mind of God. They may be convenient in our weakness for describing different classes; but in their interior and substantial nature, all natural laws are moral laws, and all moral laws

It does not make any difference, when a child, one or two years old, puts its finger is the fire, that it save: "I did not know that fire would burn." Well, did it not burn? Its burning does not depend on your knowing it at all. It does burn, you found it out, and you will know it next time. Natural laws do not say to men: "Do you not know it? It you do not, I will not strike." Men seem to think that natural laws will certainly strike, but that moral laws will not. Yes, they will. A man says "Moral laws do not, like natural laws, carry a penalty with them; I will risk the future." You are mistaken. Selfishness is a violation of natural law. People say it is natural to be selfish. It is not It is common, it is universal, everybody is selfish, and in that sense men uso the term natural; but in another sense—viz, that which relates to its design, its organic tendency—selfishness is a violation of the natural law of the mind, and according to the structure of

Well, who sees it? Who knows anything about is?

eir

81-ep-

to ind

sei as

A man with a good strong constitution, for-getful of or not knowing natural law, eats in the morning an immoderate quantity. Ha is greeses again, and this time the pain is greater than before, and this pain is part penalty for his violation of a law of his being. It is not the whole penalty; for a very time an organ scoretee pain it is because there has a greater or less amount of distategration taken place. There is organic change in the very structure. There is a reparative force which may for a time be able to compensate; but the very compensating power is being exhausted so long as he continues to transgress, though it be but little from day to day. He is a good man-oh, yes; he pays his debte; he is a kind husband; he is an excellent brother, and father, and neighbor, an citizen; he is an able engineer; he does every-thing well; but he is violating the law of diges-tion. He transgresses a little this week, and a little next week. His departure from temperate habite is slight. He never gives himself up to debauch. He never runs riot with dissipation. Everybody says of him: "He has no vices he is a good man; there is no better man." And yet, when he is thirty-five years old, men say of him: "He cannot bear what he used to bear. The man is overworked." Yes, if you mean inside work, he is. They say: "He took on inside work, he is. They say: "He took or too much business; he had too much care. But there has been a minute process of transgression. He has been sinning against the law of digestion little by little. And there has been so record kept of his violation of law which to his eye. But by and by, after e, ten, or fifteen years, the man breaks down. Now comes the doctor, and says, or ought to say: "You have been a flagrant einner for each day is so minute: for the sum of a thoueach day is so minute: for the sum of a thought of and minute transpressions, like a myriad of snow-flakes, form an avaianche that carries the power of God. A snow-flake seems to be the sign of weakness, that comes wavering through the air, uncertain whether it will fall or fly; but let snow-flakes accumulate in vast heaps upon the mountain-side, and then when they break away you have a manifestation of the power of away you have a manifestation of the power of these minutise. And if it is so with transgressions against the law of the body, is it not so with transgressions against the law of the body, is it not so with transgressions against the law of the mind?

A long time before physiologists knew what alied leaves, they rusted, as it is said, and mildewed. Microscopic examinations finally determined that leaves, by unequal temperatures and unequal hydrometric conditions, become enfesbled, and are full of pores of minute vegetables. The moment the leaf is so feeble that it has no repulsive power left these seeds root themselves in it. They grow in multitudes, like trees in a forest, on the surface of the diseased leaf, which has not strength to resist them. Now, take any one of those vegetables, which is so small that you cannot see it, and a very powerful lens will magnify it so that you can see it, with its branches and roots. Though they are so minute that a million would hardly make a speeck as large as the point of a pin, yet vegeare so minute that a million would narrily make a speck as large as the point of a pin, yet vegetation is destroyed by them. There are whole fields of grapes desolated this very summer by these minute fungi that afflict the vegetable kingdom. Weakness is the first condition; and this weakness is itself the result of disturbed

Now it is so with transgressions-not great and helinous transgressions, but transgressions in small things; in thoughts that are continu ally going wrong; in thoughts that are continu-ally going wrong; in feelings that are tending the wrong way; in faculties that are working out of tune and out of proportion, in passions that inject a malign nature through the whole mind. And when the eum of these transgrermind. And when the sum of these transgressions breaks out into one flagrant act, it weakens the whole moral constitution, and renders it liable to attack by a million little faults, not one of which is large enough to take a name, but which are large enough, when there are a mil-lion of them on the leaf of a man's life, to de-

It is to the last degree important that we should be brought up in this generation at last to understand that there is no thing that a man does which he does not do under the conditions of law; that there is no thought that a man thinks which is not thought under the condi-tions of law-and law, too, with its sanctions and prohibitions, with its rewards and penalties; so that no man can do wrong inside or outside and not render himself liable to the awards of law; and that the whole life is full of little vic-lations or obediences which amount to the difference between being a happy man, a healthy

man, and a good man, or an unbappy man, an eathy man, and a good man, or an unbappy man, an unbashihy man, and a bad man.
You cannot, then, sin in word, or thought, or motive, or feeling, without bringing yourself into that condition in which penalties in a greater or less degree will be inflicted upon you. Every man carries law and judgment in himself, and there is no such thing as his excaping from it Therefore, be not deceived. God is not mocked. The governor is, the judge is, the sheriff is, everybody is, where it is the administration of an artificial penalty, at times; but when it is the administration of natural laws, God is not mocked. Whatever a man some that shall be reap. You go out into your field and sow wheat. Every farmer, in the neighborhood may set on.

Every farmer in the neighborhood may get on the fence and point his finger at you, and hise at you, and say of the crop which you are to reap: "It shall be thistles;" but it will not be thistles—it will be wheat; and they expect help themselves. On the other hand, you may take Canada thistles, and sow them, and declare that they shall come up wheat; but they will come up Canada thistles. And the fact that the farmers believed what they said in the one case, or the fact that you are sincere in the other

Case, will make no difference.

Shall a man see that it is true in nature that every seed produces its own kind, and then say "I will sow to the flesh, and eat and drink, and yet be a good and pure man?" Shall a man say:
"I will gormandze, I will stuff mysel, I will go to excess in eating, and yet have a constitution that shall stand for many years?" No, you will nos. Moral conduct is as true to its nature as the seed is. No min ever does a wrong thing that it does not produce its legitimate resulte, both in this life and in the life to come.—

Herald of Health.

AN IMMENSE TEA STORE

From the New York Evening Gazette, July 17th The store known as the Great American Tea Company's, 31 and 33 Vessy street, is purhaps the most remarkable establishment of its kind the morning an immoderate quantity. He is timply incommoded, and the unpleasant feeling in the city, and a short sketch of it cannot fail to interest. Two large marble blocks are used to interest. Two large marble blocks are used by this Company, one for the retail store, and perience. He feels some pain, and he says: "I will learn wisdom from this." Perhaps for a day or two he does, but by-and-oy he transpresses again, and this time the pain is greater than the principle of April one hundred clerks were obliged to of April one hundred clerks were obliged to work mutil midnight filling the orders. Two targets. work until midnight filling the orders. Twenty-ein book-keepers are constantly employed in the book-keeping department, and some twenty-five men are all the fine weighing out tea and put-ting it up to fill orders which are sent in from the country. About twenty-five hundred cheets of tea are thus disposed of each week.

> A young man in this city has commenced studying German by drinking lager. It s hard to tell yet whether the rudiments will

aug 21-6m

"ECONOMY IS WEALTH."-Franklin. WHY will people pay $50 or $169 for a newing Machine, when $25 will buy a better one for all PRACTICAL purposes! Notwinstanding reports to the contrary, the subscribers beg to inform their numerous friends that the "FRANKLIN" and "MEDALLIN" Machines can be had in any quentity. This machine is a double thread constructed upon entirely new principles, and DOES NOT infringe upon any other in the world. It is emphatically the poor man's Sewing Machine, and is wertanted to excell all, others as thousands of natrons will testify. twenty years, and now God is coming to judgment with you; and this is a sign of God's judgment." You are a violator of natural law; and it makes no difference that the transgression of CO, Boston, Mass. Rates of Advertising.

Thirty cents a line for the first insertion Twenty cents for each additional insertion II Payment is required in advance

BELLS.

TROY BELL FOUNDRY.

CHURCH BELLS, Chimes and Bells of all Sizes for Churches, Pactories, Academies, motives, &c.

Made of Pure Boll Motal HUNG WITH PATENT ROTART MOUNTINGS, THE BEST IN USE.

FULLY WARRANTED. JONES & CO., Troy, N. Y

Collections of Organ Voluntaries.

Two hundred and fifty easy Voluntaries and Interludes by Zundel, $3. Schneider's Voluntaries, $5. Zeener's Voluntaries, 2 parts. Fart I, $1.52, part 11. $2. Compilete, $3. Hiles' Short Voluntaries, 9 Nes. each 80. Rink's 106 Voluntaries, Pretudes and Interludes, 75 cts. Cathedral Voluntaries, $3.50. Heauties for the Organ, 2 Nos. each $6.0 pieces for the Organ, 4 books, each $1.25. Comp., $3.50. Sent, post-paid.

OLIVER DITEON & Co., Publishers, 477 Washington St. Boston, CHARLES H. DITEON & CO., 711 Broadway, New York.

628. HOOP SKIRTS 628.

Of "Our Own Make" are manufactured expression able Trade, and embrace an assortment replete with Ladies, Misses', and Children's Hoop Skirts, both plain and Gore Trails, which for symmetry of style, fallsh, lightness, cleaticity, durability and cheapness, are much superior to any other Single or Double Spring Skirt in the American market. Every lady should try them, as we warrant satisfac-on.

Wholesale and Retail at Manufactory and Sales-born, No. 638 ARCH St.
Catalogue corrected monthly of Sizes, Styles, and grie corrected monthly it Retail sent to any address WM. T. HOPKINS.

Mendenhall's Improved Self-Acting HAND LOOM

Is proving the most useful, economical and profitable machine for family use.

THE FIRST PREMIUM was awarded to this Loom by the New York State fair, and by every State and county fair where ex-hibited for the best.

ALL WOOL GOODS,

best Jeans, Casinet, Tweed, Liney Linen and Cot ton Duck woven on any Loom. For circulars, price list and samples of cieth woves on the Loem, address with themp. A. B. GATES & CO., jyt3-10 333 Chestnut St., Philadelphis.

EVERY FAMILY SHOULD HAVE a con

UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE

FEMALE SUFFRAGE.

By A HEPEBLICAN (not a "Radical").

This is a 13me, containing 116 pages, and is de sted to a calm and moderate discussion of the Saf-age Question—the author contending that the Saf-oge, should be Qualified, and sof Unqualified and Universal.

Remanns are given against Universal Negro Suf-frage, and also against Fernale Sufrage.

The work will be forwarded by mail (postage prepaid) on the receipt of the price 50 conts, by the publishers. J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO., 1913-W. No. 714 Market St., Philadelphia.

TO AGENTS.

Rage Territory for the bea it book of the year. A ne

THE HISTORY OF THE GREAT REPUBLIC, from the Discovery of America to the present time considered from a Christian Stand Point. BY JESSE T. PECK, D. D.

ECLECTIC MEDICAL COLLEGE of PENN. SYLVANIA —WINTER SENSION commences OCTOBER 7, 1867 — Thirty students taken for $10 per aession _ No other expenses. For particulars address JOSEPH SITES, M. D. Desa, 1927-12t — 892 North Sixth St., Philadelphia

PIVERVIEW MILITARY ACADEMY,
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. y.—Location healthy;
Scenery unequalted; Building convenient; Teachers highly educated, carnest, working men; System of Order unsurpassed. A wide-awake thorough-going School for holy wishing to ne trained for Buildeas, for College, or for West Point or the Naval Academy. For circulars, address OTIE BISBEE,
A.M., Principal and Proprieto. demy. For circulars, address A. M., Principal and Proprietor.

VASSAR COLLEGE, POUGHKEEPSIE. N. Y., commences its next year, sept. 19, 1807. The examination of candidates for admission will begin on the 18th of Sept. and continue through the work. As the Trustees have appropriated some of the most desirable rooms in the Professors houses to the students, about 50 additional students can now be well accommodated. Early applicants will be admitted first if qualified. Circulars, containing att information in regard to conditions of admission, currees of study, educational advantages, expenses, &c., may be had by applying to Mr. JAMEN N. SCHOU, Register. Laster College, Poughkeepsie, New York, JOHN B. RAYMOND, President.

PENNINGTONINSTITUTE, 23d year begg August 22th Terms reachine. For Cata-ogues, address A. F. Lasii F. E. Penaington, N. J. aug 20-7m

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

THE

GREAT AMERICAN

Tea Company

HAVE INTY RECEIVED TWO FULL CARGOES

OF THE FINEST NEW CROP TEAS,

22,000 HALF CHESTS by ship Golden State, 12,000 HALF CHESTS by ship George Shotton.

In addition to these large cargoss of Black and Japan Tess, the Company are constantly receiving large in voices of the finest quality of Green Tesafrom the Mo-yane districts of Chins, which are unrivaled for fine sess and delicacy of flavor, which they are se

OOLONG (Black), Soc., 600., 700., 800., 100., best & MIXED (Green and Black), 80c., 60c., 703., 80c., 90c. best 81 W B.
ENGLISH BREAKFAST, 500, 600, 700, 800, 900, 900, 91, 91, 91 lb, best 91 20 W B.
IMPERIAL (Green), 500, 600, 700, 800, 900, 91, 91 best, 91 25 W B.
YOUNG HYSON (Green), 500, 600, 700, 800, 900, 91, 91 b, best 91 25 W B.
UNCOLORED JAPAN, 500, 81, 41 10, best 91 25 GONPOWDER, $1 25, best $1 50 $ B.

Coffees Roasted and Ground Daily.

GROUND COFFEE, Do., Do., Do., So., best 400 per la Hotels, Saloons, Hoarding-house knepers, and Families who use large quantities of Coffee, and conomize in the tarticle by using our Franch breakfast and Disner Coffee, which we sail at the low price of Da. per pound and warrant to give perfect satisfaction.

Consumers can save from 50c, to $1 per lb, by purchaing their Teas of the GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., Nos. 31 and 33 VESEY STREET. Post-office Box, 8643 New York City.

Post-office Box, 5643 New York City.

We warrant all the goods we sell to give entire naturaction. If they are not satisfactory they can be returned at our spaces within 30 days, and have the money refunded.

Through our system of supplying Clubs throughout the country, consumers in all parts of the United States can receive their Teas at the same prices (with the small additional expense of transportation) as though they bought them at our warehouses in this city.

Some parties inquire of us how they shall proceed to get up a club. The answer is simply thus. Let each person wishing to join in a club, say how much tea or person whing to join in a club, say how much tea or Price List, as published in the approximation of the warres, known as the same with the approximation of the warres, that, and when the cub is complete send it to us by mail, and we will put each party's goods in separate packages, and mark the name upon them, with the cost, so there need be no confusion in their distribution—such party getting exactly what he orders, and no more. The cost of transportation the members of the club can divide squared to go the confusion of the club can divide a squared to the same and the complementary package for the transportation the amount ordered exceed their folialism, we will for amount ordered exceed thirt folialism, we will folially a set of the party setting up the Club. Our profits are small, but we will be an interal as we can afford. We send no complementary package for Clubs of less than $30.

N. B.—All villages and towns where a large number

N. B.—All villages and towns where a large number earle, by clubbing together, can reduce the cost of their reside, by classified and lowers where a large number. Teas and Coffees about one-third by sending directly to "The Great American Tea Company."

BEW ARE of all concerns that advertise thergolives as branches of our Establishment, or copy our name either wholly or in part, as they are begins or imitations. We have no branches, and do not, in any case, authorized the use of our name.

of The Great American Tea Company. Direct letters and orders to the GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMP'Y, Nos. 31 and 33 VESEY ST.

Post office Box, 5643 New York City.

WHEELER & WILSON'S HIGHEST PREMIUM

SEWING MACHINES,

No. 625 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Philadelphia Agency, No. 704 Chesiant St.

These Machines are now soid, with valuable smproviments, at the following schedule of prices :-

Fishs Table, #44 Half Case, Panelled, Otted Walnut, Cu Salf Case, Polished, Bine's Walnut or Muhogany, 64

No. W Machine, with

Wated Black Walnot Table. $66 Half Case, Panelled, Olled Walnot, TV Half Case, Pollshed, Black Walnot of Mahogany, 78 Half Case, Pollshed, Rosewood, 80 Full Case, Pollshed, Black Walnot of Mahogany, 96 Full Case, Pollshed, Black Walnot of Mahogany, with Drawers, 100 Full Case, Pollshed, Rosewood, 100

No. 1 Machine, with

Polished Table,
Haif Case, Oiled Wainut,
Haif Case, Polished, Black Wainutor Mahogany, 84
Haif Case, Polished, Rosewood,
Fall Case, Polished, Black Wainutor Manogany, 106
Fall Case, Polished, Black Wainutor Mahogany, with Drawers,
Fall Case Polished, goewood,
116

Every Machine is sold complete with a Hemmer, Nos I and 2 Machines are sold with the new Glass Cloth-Presser, New-style Hemmer and Braider, No. 3 with the Old-style Hemmer.

(E) The number 3, plain table, (worth $55) of the above list, is the machine we are now offering as a Parameter for The Labr's Friend and The Sarva. as a France Pory see Prospectus. Any of the higher priced machines may be procured by sending as the difference in Cash

DEACON & PETERSON. 319 WALNUT STREET, PHILADELINIA.

WANTED-An agent in every village and city In the United States to sell a new style of Show Cards desired by every retailer. Most persons will purchase several—many a dozen or more Also travelling agents wanted. Send for circular 50 cents for samples, with which you can get sul-scribers I A PITTMAN, aug'll 2t S West Third St , Cincinnati, Ohle

The LOWE PRINTING PRESSES are the best and cheapest portable Card and Job Presses ever invented. Price of an Office with Presses, $25, $25, $25 Send for a circular to the LOWE PRESS CO, jei5-6m.

PATENT.10.000 IN USE
PHILADELPHIA.
ASSASS THE MENSTON.
ADDRESS THE MENSTON.

B. FRANK. PALMER.LLO.PRESTA. A.LIMB CT.

Whose inventions stand approved as the "best" by the most emissus Scientific and Surgical Societies of the world, the inventor having been honored with the award of FIFTY GOLD AND SILVER MEDALS (or "First Prizes"), including the GREAT MEDALS of the WORLD'S EXHIBI-TIONS IN LONDON AND NEW YORK, also the most Honorary Report of the great SOCIETY OF SURGEONS OF FARIS, giving his Petents place above the ENGLISH and PRESION.

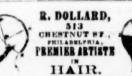

place above the ENGLISH and PREROM.

DR. PALMER gives personal attention to the business of his profession, sided by men of the best qualifications and greatest enjectence. He is specially commissioned by the GOVERNMENT and has the patronage of the preminent OFFICERS of the ARMY and NAVY SIX MAJOR-GENERALS and more than a thousand less distinguished efficient activities are, by their aid, filling important positions, and effectually conceal their misoriume.

All general "PALMER LIMBS" have the name of the incomment of the incom

The attention of Surgeons, Physicians, and all per-The well-known LINCOLN ARM is also made of its by this Company. This Arm has the paronage of the U. S. GOVEFNMENT.

To avoid the imposition of PIRATICAL COPY-ISTS, apply only to Dz. PALMER, as above directed.

laventor of the celebrated GOSBAMER VENTI-LATING WIG and ELAWIC BAND TOU-PACES Instructions to enable Ladies and Gentie-men to measure their own heads with accuracy

Per Figs, Inches.

No. 1.—The round of the head

Serion forchead over the head to neck.

Jerom ear to ear over the top car round the forchead.

He has always ready for sale a splendid stock of Gents' Wigs, Toupees, Ladies' Wigs, Half Wigs, Frirots, Itrada, Curis, A.c., beautifully manufac-tured, and as cheap as any establishment in the Union Letters from any part of the world will reeive attention

Private rooms for Dycing Ladies' and Gentiemen's Rafe

PENNSYLVANIA CENTRAL BAILROAD

SUMMER TIME, TAKING EFFECT

JUNE 2nd, 1867. The trains of the Pennsylvania Central R. R. leave the Depot, at flat and Market Streets, which is reached directly by the cars of the Market Street Passenger Railway. Those of the Chestaut and Wainut Street Kallway ron within one square of it. On Sennars—The Market Street care leave Front and Market Streets as invested the departure of each train.

Steeping Car Tickets can be had on application at the Ticket Office, North-West corner of Ninth and Chestnut Street.

AGENTS OF THE Union TRANSFER COMPANY WIll call for and deliver baggage at the Depot. Orders left at No. 901 Chestaut Street, or No. 1 South

TRAINS LEAVE DEPOT, VIZ ..

| MAIL TRAIN | LAVE DAPOY, V22.1
| MAIL TRAIN | FAOLL ACCOMMODATION, No. 1 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 10.30 | 1

Frie Mail leaves daily, except Baturday.
Fulladelpula Express leaves daily. All other trains sailly, except Bunday.
THE WESTERN ACCOMMODATION TRAIN

to fire and accommodations apply to FRA?

VRAINS ARRIVE AT BEFOR VIZ

For further information, apply to JOHN C. ALLEN, Ticket Agent, 991 Chestnut St. BAMUEL H WALLACE, Ticket Agent, at the Depot

The Pennsylvania Halirond Co will not assume any rise for Eaggage, except for Wearing Apparel, and limit their responsibility to One Hundred Doilars in value. All linguage exceeding that amount in value, will be at the risk of the owner, unless taxen by special contract.

*p7-M EDWARD H WILLIAMS

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,

Magnifying 500 times, masted for 50 CENTS. THESE for $1.00 Address F P BOWEN, decir-ul Her will, Heston, Mass

WHINKERS.—Da Lamontes Connolla will force Whiskers on the smoothest face, of Halr on Baid Heads Never known to fall Samplesens for 10 cents Address REEVES & CO. 75 Nasan St., New York.

WIT ARD EUMOR.

Martin Van Buren.

Coming down on the upper deck of an Albany steamer one day, a party of gentlemen, as the boat neared Kinderbook landing, were discousing the merits of Mr. Martin Van Buren. Some praised, others condemned; and while they were discussing the question, the boat landed, and, let Mr. Van Buren himself came on board. One of the party had been dwalling on his non-commitalism, and complaining that a "plain answer to a plain question was never yet elicited from him."

"I'll wager champages for the company," added he, "that one of us shall ge down to the eabin and ask Mr. Van Boren the simplest question that can be thought of, and he will evade a direct answer. Yes, and I'll give him leave, too, to tell Mr. Van Buren why he asks the ion, and that there is a bet depending on

This seemed fair enough. One of the party was deputed to go down and try the exper ment. He found Mr. Van Buren, whom h knew well, in the saloon, and said to him:

"Mr. Van Buren, some gentiemen on the upper deck have been accusing you of non-committalism, and have just laid a wager that you would not give a plain answer to the simplest question, and they deputed me to test the Now, air, allow me to ask you: Where does the sun rise?"

Mr. Van Buren's brow contracted; he heald for a moment and then said : The terms east and west, sir, are conven do !" interrupted the interrogator " we've lost the bet!"

The Purchase of Pigs.

Mr. Sayre lisps a little. Some years since an overseer of one of his farms told him he needed some hogs on his place. Baid Mr. Sayre—
"Very well, go and buy four or five thews and pigth right away, and put them on the

The man, accustomed to obey, and that with questioning, asked— Shall I take the money with me to purchase with ?'

'No, thir. They all know me. Hend them here; I'll pay for them, or give you the money to pay when you get them."

The overseer went his way, and in two weeks returned, when the following conversation took Place:- "Well, Mr. Sayre, I can't find that many pig I have ridden all over the country, all about and can get but between eight and nine hun dred."

Eight or nine hundred what?"

"Eight or nine hundred pigs."
"Eight or nine hundred pigth! Who told you to buy that many pigth? Are you a fool?"
"You told me to buy them two weeks since. I have tried to do so."

Kight or nine hundred pigth! I never told you any thutch thing."

"But you did; you told me to go and buy four or five thousand pigs."

"I didn't do any such a thing. I told you to bur four or five thows and little pigth, and you have done it, I thould thay."

Mr. Sayre had pork to sell next (all. Pork ross, and Mr. Sayre made his pile.

"Dry Times."

It is remarkable with what case "local" is got out by some of the papers during times like the present, when nothing scome to move with velocity enough to produce a perceptible rising of the blood, unless it be the sun's rays. The following is a gigantic effort of a reporter to one of our exchanges :"Yesterday we saw a night that from muscles with horror. A backman driving down Clark street at a rapid pace, came very near running ever a nuise and two children. There would have been one of the most heart rending catastrophes ever recorded, had not the nurse with wonderful forethought, left the children a home before she went out, and providentially stepped into a store just before the back passed. Then, too, the hackman, just before reaching the crossing, thought of comething he had for gotten, and turning about, drove in an opposite direction. Had it not been for this most wonderful concurrence of favorable circumstances, doting father, a loving mother, and affectionate brothers and sisters, would have been plunged into the deepest woe and most unutterable funeral expenses."

The Louisville Democrat says: "A laughable scene occurred on Fourth street resterday afternoon. A great big salmon-colored lady, of the African persuasion, weighing something less than a ton and a half, dressed 'to kill,' and a 'hornet's nest' sticking out upon the back of her head, was wadding along. She was 'ob-served of all observera.' A young lady whose back hair was pulled so very tight that she looked as if she was walking on her toes, and as if she had been driven too far into her short dress with a siedre harmyer at conced to view the dress with a sledge hammer, stopped to view the 'cullud lady' with a critic's eye, not to 'pass her imperfections by.' Both stopped and grinned at each other a moment when the 'lady is lack' struck a theatrical attitude, and said Law me, miss, you needn't be standin' dar erinnin' at me, kase the Lord knows you'se bigger curiosity to look at than I is. parted in peace."

A Fast Beard.

Three brothers, bearing a remarkable re-semblance to one another, are in the habit of shaving at the same barber-shop. Not long ago, one of the brothers entered the shop early in the morning, and was shaved by a German who had been at work in the shop only for a day or two. About noon another brother came in and underwent a similar operation at the hands of the same barber. In the evening the third brother made his appearance, when the German dropped his rezer in astonishment, and exclaimed-Vell, mine Gott! dat man hach de fashtest beard I never saw; I shaves him dis mornin', shaves him at dinner-times, and be gomes back now, mit his beard so long as it

"Ab! Pat," said a discontented hod carrier, "don's take up this mode of life. It has too many ups and downs in it."

If a bottle of ginger pop weighs one

GENTEEL POVERTY DINING IN STATE.

A Confirmed Grumbler.

The following will bear republishing occasionally

Some time ago there lived in Edinburgh vell known grumbler named Sandy Black, whose often-recurring fits of spleen or indigestion pro duced some amusing scenes of senseless irrita-bility, which were highly relished by all except the brute's good, patient little wife. One morning Sandy rose bent on a quarrel; the haddies and eggs were excellent, done to a turn, and had been ordered by himself the previous evening; and breakfast passed without the looked for cause of complaint

"What will you have for dinner, Sandy?" "A chicken, madam," said the husband.

"Roast or boiled?" asked the wife.
"Confound it, madam, if you had been a good and considerate wife, you'd have known before this what I liked," Sindy growled out, and slamming the door behind him, left the house. It was in the spring, and a friend who was present heard the little wife say, "Sandy's bent u a disturbance to-day; I shall not please him do what I can."

The dinner-time came, and Sandy and his friend sat down to dinner: the fish was eaten in ilence, and, on raising the cover of the dish be ore him, in a towering passion he called out Boiled chicken! I hate it, madam. A chicken boiled is a chicken spoiled."

Immediately the cover was raised for another chicken, roseted to a turn.

"Madam, I won't eat roset chicken," rosred Sandy; "you know how it should have been Sandy ; At that instant a broiled chicken, with mush ooms, was placed on the table.

"Without green peas!" roared the grumbler.
"Here they are, dear," said Mrs. Black.
"How dare you epend my money in that

They were a present," said the wife, inter cupting him.

It sing from his chair and rushing from th room, amitst a roar of laughter from his friend, be clenched his fist and shouted, "How dare you receive a present without my leave!"

THE STORACH - I firmly believe that almost every malady of the human frame is, either high-ways or by-ways, connected with the slo The wees of every other member are own I never see a fashionable physician mys-teriously consuting the pulse of his patient, but I feel a desire to exclaim, Why not tell the poor gentleman at once, "S.r., you have eaten too much; you've drunk too much; and you have not taken exercise enough?" The human frame was not created imperfect. It is we ourselves who have made it so. There exists no donker in creation so overleaded as our etomache.

SECRECY - You should be careful not to er trust another unnecessarily with a secret which it may be a hard matter for him to keep, so which may expose him to comebody's dis-pleasure when it is hereafter discovered that he was the object of your confidence. Your desire for aid, or for sympathy, is not to be indulged by dragging other people into your misfortunes. There is as much responsibility in imparting your own secrets, as in keeping those of A tourist ease to those who go up to Mount Washington, that they get into pretty to Jericho; and that the landlords there ask how much money one has, where he comes from give him a return ticket, and take all his cash.

AGRICULTURAL.

Dark Side of Wool Growing.

A correspondent of the Prairie Farmer say he was induced to engage in the wool growing business from "being taken" with the way in which the beauties and profits thereof have been presented by "Wool Grower" and other writer upon the subject, during the past six or eigh years. But being "superlatively disgusted with sheep and the sheep business," he proceeds to detail his experiences and convictions in the fol lowing bill of particulars :-

I did not buy sheep at as high figures as did many other men at the same time, but I bought better ones than many others gid for the same money. I believe I have fed and handled them with proper care, but the thing don't come out as I was led to expect by "Wool Grower's" cyphering. He used to sell us that in a tolerably good sized flock, a man ought not to lose over five percent, and in a large flock not over ten per cent, in a year. I started with 1,400, which perhaps, might be called a large flock; now i have never been able to keep my losses any where near as low as ten per cent. I wonder i

"W. G." ever kept on paper, an account of every sheep which he lost in a year? As a fellow-aufferer and neighbor says, "Sheep will die in spite of thunder." During the summer they do not go so very fast; in fact f you do not put each one down on paper the very day the carcase is discovered, you will be inclined to think, in the fall,—Ob, I have no lost many: perhaps a half a dozen. In the early winter and clear up to March, you wil feel as if you were getting along swimmingly but don't lay any flattering unction to your soul until you reach the Ides of Murch, the same Ides which Owser was to bewere of. About this time, perhaps, you think it well enough to begin entering in your book, dead sheep. Like an innocent, you think, once April comes in and your flock can get a bite of grass, the mortality of sheep will cease. The next two months unde ceive you terribly, and you feel as if sheep laid down and died from sheer spite.

When "lambing-time"—I believe that's the word—arrive, you are expected by all good authorities to raise 75 per cent. You are just green enough to keep a book account here again, so a to see whether you are doing what is expected of you. For a while you feel firstrate; your book reads, so many ewes have lambed, so many lambs living; in a week or so you have to go back to your book and chalk out some of those set down as living; on account of the natural convergity of the whole shear kind which will perversity of the whole sheep kind, which will pereist in dying without any show of reason. Putting down, rubbing out and altering, you run your now badly speckled book up to the time when all have come and they are ready for "trimming." On finishing this job you proceed to count your pile of talls; as the pile dimin-ishes, how your face lengthens! "Only so many !" in a mournful tone of voice; then you count your book; book says so many; then you count your pile of talls and continue glancing from book to talls until your head swims. Worse than all, you reflect, they cannot be coneidered raised as yet, but two or three month must elepse before weaning-time. At weaningtime you take a fresh count, -- having given up book by this time--and sit down to figure your cear's increase. The number of increase has to be expressed by the algebraical sign of minus

But I won't particularize any farther; it is fficient to say that in my four years' experience, I have never found anything to come ou as I had been led to expect by eathusiastic woolgrowers. My losses have been greater; my per entage of lambs less; my weight of clip less the price obtained for my wool less, and I have been generally and particularly disappointed. I have discovered, among other things, that no forget how many "Wool-Grower" said a farm would carry) to the acre, and I have also learned that a pasture ought not to be etocked with hale the number we meet with in agricultural papers Repecially is this true in dry seasons. Sheep bite so close that when a drought comes, it uses up a pasture much worse than when the same ought to carry. I have about come to the con clusion that one sheep will eat, of grass, as much

When it comes to marketing wool (and I an glad I can agree with "Wool-Grower" on one point) I have found a great drawback, not as he says, "in the manner of marketing," but in the market itself. I find that I am dependent on the mere chance that one or two buyers may come to my barn, or else on the honesty of some commission merchant to whom I may send it to sell for me. Even in the latter case, there are times when, for two or three months in succession, no buyer seeking wool enters his lofts. How is it with other crops? I can sell my wheat or my in the year, or I can send it to any large market the year. I can sell my cattle-either stock cattle or fat cattle, and my hoge, twenty times where I can sell my wool crop, or a flock of sheep, ouce. My cattle and my hoge are not turning into "culls," every two or three years,

Your sheep stock is as fragile as china ware and as perishable as strawberries. As to your wool market you are not much better off than those men who have bought high-priced Cashhere goats, the wool of which is said to be out from eight to sixteen dollars per pound—one could only find the man who buys it. Some say it is worked by a factory in Edinburgh, some in Paris, but I have never found the man who could tell which.

I had been led to expect great things of the pected more from it for the reason that it went into effect immediately. We see now how much it affects the price of wool. Old sheep men tell it affects the price of wool. Old sheep men tell me that I ought not to expect much from it this year, from the fact that the country was filled with woolens, previous to its passage. They say, hold on until next year and then you will see. I shall "hold on," because I have to, but I don't expect to see any benefit from the because I calculate there will be no tariff of that

Next winter the free trade interest in Congress will say, "We passed this tariff last winter particularly to help the gool grower; it has not benefitted him the "first continental." Mr. McCalloch will say, just so, gentlemen, nor have I been able to get any revenue from wool or woolens.

Well, I have got sheep to sell, and so have innertenths of the sheep owners in Illinois. If we can sell out, or give out, or kill out, or led die out, of sheep, I suppose it will be all the better, in a year or two, for those happy wool growers who, it seems to me keep sheen, not HAMILTON growers who, it seems to me, keep sheep, not because they find them profitable, but because they are fascinated by, and in love with, the stock.—A. R. H., Shelby county, Illinois, July, 1867.

CIDER-KEEPING IT SWEET -An exchange tells how to keep cider by saying :- When fermenta-tion commences in one barrel, draw off the liquor into another one-straining through a fianne Put into the cider three-fourths of an oil of wintergreen—well shaken up in a pint of alcohol. But one difficulty is said to pertain to this preparation of cider. It is so palatable that people won't keep it long.

RECEIPTS.

SWEET PICKLE PRACHES-(EXCELLENT.)-PARE the pickles and cut them in halves, and to two pounds of fruit, take one quart of vinegar, and one pound of sugar. Put the sugar and vinegar over the fire, skim it, and when it has simmere over the fire, skim it, and when it has simmered fifteen minutes, put on the peaches, and let them remain until they are slightly cooked, but not soft. Boil cinnamon and mace in the syrup. Cloves are nice, but discolor the fruit.

SPICKED PRACHES—Take nine pounds of cling-stone peaches, ripe, but not soft, pare and haive them, or leave them whole. Make a syrup of four pounds of brown sugar and a pint of good vinegar, some mace and cinnamon, and skim is well. Let it cook a quarter of an hour, and ther well. Let it cook a quarter or an nour, and then throw in the peaches, a few at a time, so as to keep them as whole as possible, and when clear, take them out and lay on dishes, and put in more; when all are done, pour the syrup over the peaches. SAUCH OF CHERBIES OR DAMSONS, FOR MEATS. Allow half a pound of brown sugar to every pound of fruit, and to every seven pounds of fruit a pint of strong vinegar. Put all in to gether, and let them cook slowly until they are done. Then take the fruit from the syrup and put on dishes. Let the syrup boil longer unti namon. Pour over the fruit in jars, whilst hot.

WATERMELON SWEET PICKLES—Two pounds of watermeion or muskmelon rinds boiled in re water until tender. Drain them weil. The make a syrup of two pounds of sugar, one quar of vinegar, half an ounce of mace an ounce of cinnamon, and some roots of ginger boiled until thick, and pour over the melone boiling ho Drain off the syrup, heat it until boiling hot and pour over the melons three days in suc cession. They are very nice, and will keep two

HITE WALNUT CATCHUP .- Gather the wa nuts when soft enough to run a pin through, put them in salt and water for ten days; then p them in east and water for ten days; then pound them in a mortar or pot, and to every dozen walnuts put a quart of strong vinegar and stir it occasionally. Then strain it through a bag, and to every quart of liquor put a teaspoonful of pounded mace, the same of cloves, and a fer ponues and polices of onion. Boil it half an nour, multiple it. If you use black walnuts, recold, bottle it. move the hulls in the same way as for pickles.
CUCUMBER CATCHUP—Pare and cut the cu cumbers into very small square slices, the six of a grain of corn, and add onions cut in the same way, in the proportion of one onion to every half dozen cucumbers. Mix them and salt them well, and let them stand ten or twelv Then drain them well through a sieve hours. or colander. Sesson with white or black pep per to your taste, and put in alternate layers of the fruit and white mustard seed, until your jars are three-fourths full. The jars must be small as this catchup spolls by exposure to the air Fill the jars entirely to the top with vinegar. The vinegar must be the very best cider gar. White wine dissolves the fruit. Some sons prefer the catchup with wine in it. Madeira wine is the beet, in the proportion of a pint to every gallon of vinegar. Seal up the jars well, and every few days examine them see the cucumbers rising above the vinegar, open the jar and proces them down, and fill up with vinegar, and seal tightly sgain. Keep them in a cool place during the warm weather.

Towaro Carchur.—Take a peck of ripe to matoes, wash and cut them in pieces, and put in a porcelain kettle, and boil until they are quite coft. Then mash them well and strain through a hair sieve. Season with salt and Cayenne pepper, and white mustard-seed, and let it boil till half of it is boiled away. Let the bottles in which you intend to pour it be set on the back part of the stove and gradually heated, and pour the catchup into the bottles when quite hot, but not boiling. Cork and seal well, and keep in a cool place, until the warm weather is You may add powdered cloves and black pepper, if you like them, but they will discolo the tomato juice.—Dixie Cookery.

Hougoumont is a conspicuous feature of the great field of Waterioo, and a name fa miliarly used in speaking of the famous battle. In course of time it will be forgotten that this is a mere mistake, which originated with the great General who achieved the victory, catching up from the peasantry around the sound of Chateau Goument, and the real name of the little de meene in queetion. Nobody doubte, however the right of the "Great Dake" to call a place he has made so famous by any name he might please to apply, and so Hougoumont it will remain while history lasts.

A travelling English marquis, in the course of the "grand tour," arrived at Berlin, weary of lionising. When he went to bed, at the close of his first day's residence, he exclaimed, "Thank Heaven, I have come to a place where there is nothing worth seeing !"

THE RIDDLES.

Enigma.

WRITTER POR THE SATURDAY EVENIES POST.

I am composed of 31 letters. My 22, 7, 26, 5, 13, is used in building. My 5, 24, 14, 1, 19, is a river in Russia.

My 5, 24, 14, 1, 19, is a river in Russia.
My 2, 3, 8, 28, 9, is a boy's name.
My 15, 16, 17, 20, 18, 19, is a vegetable.
My 29, 25, 1, 18, is a kind of grain.
My 24, 29, 6, 26, 21, is a bird.
My 10, 5, 18, is a kind of drink.
My 18, 27, 1, 29, 11, is a lake in Russia.
My 18, 17, 21, 23, 25, 1, is a lake in Scotland.
My 18, 24, 23, 3, is a lake in Ireland.

My 30, 31, 18, 5, 27, 25, is a girl's name.

My whole is what we would like to see completed.

HAMILTON D. CARR. Laurens, Otsego Co., N. Y.

Enigma.

On a monarch's brow I sit, When all things look brightly; O'er a baby's cheek I flit, Kissing it so lightly.

Oft of Affection am I born My sponsors Joy and Mirth; Am there too bright for earth. mes, on angels' faces we

You can call me up at will, And dismiss at pleasure; Laugh, and you destroy me-I exist in measure.

Weep, and I must vanish quite. It may be for years; Yet am I oft a charming eight, Seen through a veil of tears.

Before the rod of care I fles, But before Love stand true; Oh, set, dear friends, much store on me I bring much joy to you! DOR

Problem.

WRITTEN FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

From a certain station near a river appear oak tree due south, on the other side. There is also a pine tree in a southwesterly course, but inaccessible and invisible, in consequence of the river and a high bluff on its bank. A distance of 90 yards is measured due west from the station to an elm; and ten yards further in the same direction, is a point due north from the pine; thence in a course considered to be parallel to the line joining the first station, and the pine tree at the distance of 45 yards, a perpen pine tree at the distance of 45 yards, a perpendicular line was found to hit the pine and to be parallel to the straight line between the elm and the oak. The distance between the oak and pine trees, and also the distances from the first station to the oak and pine, and from the elm to the oak and pine, are required.

E. P. NORTON. E. P. NORTON.

Allen, Hillsdale Co., Mich. An answer is requested.

Problem.

WRITTEN FOR THE SATURDAY SYSSING POST.

There is a circular field of ten acres. It is required to make a walk three feet wide conenclosed by the walk may be equal to the area exterior to it. What is the interior radius of the walk? J. B. SANDERS.

Tobinsport, Indiana.

An answer is requested.

Mathematical Problem.

WRITTEN FOR THE SATURDAY SYRNING POST. A spherical air-bubble having risen from depth of 1,000 feet in the sea, was one inch in diameter when it reached the surface. Re-quired, its diameter at the bottom, and the curve described by the extremities of a horizontal di-ameter of the bubble, supposing its centre to move in a vertical line. ARTEMAS MARTIN.

Franklin, Venango Co., Pa. An answer is requested.

Conundrums. Why are people who stutter not to be selled on? Ans.—Because they are always breaking their word. Why is an alarm of fire in the night like clothes brush? Ans .- Because it spoils the What sort of blades were the Roman Emperors, Augustus and Tiberius? Ans.—The blades that formed a pair of Cwars, of course.

Why is a monarch who can't talk like his dominions? Ans.—Because he is a king

Answers to Last.

HISTORICAL ENIGMA-" Never mind, brother, we shall kindle to-day a fire in England, which, please God, shall never be extinguished." Latim r A. Ridley.) ENIGMA-"Every cloud has a silver lining."

Answer to A. Martin's PROBLEM, June 22d-The required probability is 524288-1048575.

A. Martin. Here are only two possible cases, vis. : odd and even, therefore the probability will be to there being no reason why the one should happen to be taken from the hag rather than the other. Robert Curley.

Answer to W. F. L. Sanders's PROBLEM, same date—2 067 feet. J. S. Poebus and L. Lebus. 1.8x feet. R. Curley.

Answer to W. H. Morrow's PROBLEM, same date—Jan. 28th. W. H. Morrow, L. Lebus, R. Curley, A. H. Heath, J. Wilson, J. S. Phebus,

Answer to J. M. Greenwood's PROBLEM, June 29th-4-25, 36-25, 81-25, and 1-25, 16-25, 64-25. J. M. Greenwood. The numbers are 1-25, 16-25, 64-25. A. Martin.

Answer to W. H. Morrow's PROBLEM, same date—Distance, 71½ miles. The constable first travelled 8½ miles per hour. The thief travelled 9½ miles per hour. W. H. Morrow, J. S. Phebus and V. W. Heath.